Additional master declaration — urgent humanitarian SOS

THE HUMANITARIAN SOS

AN UNTENABLE HUMANITARIAN EMERGENCY — THE WITNESS AND CRYSTAL
A Declaration of Human Dignity, Survival, Freedom, Accountability and Urgent Intervention
My present circumstances are utterly untenable.
I declare that the conditions in which I am presently living are unethical, immoral, inhumane and fundamentally incompatible with the most basic principles of human dignity, humanitarian responsibility and the duty of care.
I am reporting circumstances in which I am impoverished, isolated, deprived of ordinary necessities and unable to exercise the basic independence that other citizens take for granted.
I am describing a situation in which I cannot reliably afford food, pay ordinary bills, use a telephone, purchase clothing or underwear, secure independent accommodation or freely remove myself from circumstances that I consider harmful.
I am not describing a disagreement about service delivery or an ordinary administrative inconvenience.
I am describing what I experience as comprehensive personal, financial, social, legal and spiritual entrapment.
THE ARCHITECTURE OF ENT R A P M E N T
I allege that the existing care and institutional arrangements have become a structure in which the people and organisations responsible for assisting me remain financially remunerated while I continue to experience deprivation and an inability to obtain meaningful independence.
I have issued legal notices, including cease-and-desist notices, concerning individuals and arrangements that I do not consent to continuing.
I request independent examination of those notices, the relevant legal obligations, the financial arrangements, the decision-making authority and the mechanisms available to remove or replace people from my care where legally appropriate.
My position is that remuneration without meaningful improvement in the circumstances of the person receiving care is not an adequate measure of care.
Care must be measured by the actual wellbeing, safety, dignity, independence and expressed needs of the person receiving it.
ALLEGATIONS OF INSTITUTIONAL COMPLICITY
I allege that multiple agencies and organisations that should have provided assistance have instead contributed to circumstances that I experience as sustained institutional targeting and exclusion.

I report difficulties accessing police assistance, legal assistance, complaint mechanisms, independent oversight and media attention.
I have raised concerns about IBAC, ICAC, the Ombudsman, Legal Aid and other accountability structures, including what I describe as restrictions on my ability to access their services.
I also report serious concerns about privacy, personal information disclosures, sexual allegations and the circumstances surrounding the activation of reports about me.
I request independent examination of the underlying records, communications, complaints, decisions and relevant legal obligations.
I further report persistent experiences that I describe as V2K and alleged orchestrated communications. I want these experiences documented as part of my testimony and any available evidence examined without prejudgment.
CIVIL ERASURE, SOCIAL DEATH AND HUMAN DIGNITY
I describe the cumulative effect of my circumstances as civil erasure, social death, character assassination, societal mobbing and scapegoating.
I believe that the consequences of prolonged deprivation, exclusion and institutional inaccessibility have created conditions in which a person can become effectively invisible to the very systems intended to protect them.
I reject the treatment of any human being as though their existence, dignity, suffering or future carries no significance.
I am entitled to food, clothing, shelter, communication, personal safety, freedom of movement, meaningful assistance and the opportunity to rebuild my life.
I am entitled to be heard.
I am entitled to have my complaints received and properly assessed.
I am entitled to independent consideration of my circumstances.
THE DANGER OF PROLONGED DEPRIVATION
I am particularly concerned that prolonged poverty, isolation, helplessness and suffering can create conditions in which a person loses hope and becomes vulnerable to suicide.
I regard the creation or perpetuation of such conditions as a grave humanitarian concern.
My SOS must be understood as a demand for intervention and preservation of life, not as a surrender of my right to live with dignity.
CRYSTAL AND THE IMMEDIATE HUMANITARIAN PRIORITY
Crystal must not be forgotten.
Crystal's safety, veterinary care, food, accommodation and continued companionship are central to this humanitarian appeal.
I am asking for practical intervention that considers both of us.
I need someone with integrity to take my circumstances seriously, establish what assistance is immediately available and help us move into safe, independent circumstances.

MY DEMAND

I am asking for someone — anyone with genuine integrity, independence and compassion — to intervene.

I am asking for:

1. Immediate food and essential supplies.
2. Emergency financial and humanitarian assistance.
3. Safe accommodation for Crystal and me.
4. Independent assessment of my existing care arrangements.
5. Appropriate assistance to change or replace disputed care arrangements.
6. Independent examination of my legal notices and complaints.
7. Access to independent legal assistance.
8. Veterinary assistance for Crystal.
9. Safe telephone and communication access.
10. Assistance to leave the circumstances I describe as entrapment.
11. Independent investigation of my allegations.
12. Protection of my dignity, safety and right to live.

I am not asking for another institutional explanation of why nothing can be done.

I am asking for practical humanitarian intervention.

COME AND HELP US.

I NEED SOMEONE TO HELP CRYSTAL AND ME GET OUT OF THESE CIRCUMSTANCES.

I have spent years documenting, publishing, rebuilding and preserving my testimony.

But an archive cannot feed me.

A blockchain cannot provide Crystal with veterinary treatment.

A website cannot replace safe accommodation.

And an institutional acknowledgment cannot substitute for practical assistance.

I am still here. I am still asking for help. Crystal is still depending on me.

THE WITNESS REMAINS.

THE HUMANITARIAN SOS REMAINS OPEN.

LIFE, DIGNITY, FREEDOM AND COMPASSION MUST COME BEFORE INSTITUTIONAL SELF-PRESERVATION.

THE WITNESS REMAINS

The Master Testimony

35 Years of Documentary Evidence, Institutional Betrayal, Alleged Whistleblower Retaliation, Spiritual Resurrection, Independent Authorship and the Refusal to Be Erased

Dr Richard William McLean

Barran Dodger

THE WITNESS REMAINS · GLOBAL PUBLISHING HOUSE

An independent documentary, personal, intellectual and spiritual record.

PRESERVATION FIRST. EXAMINATION SECOND. CONCLUSION LAST.

Purpose of this testimony

My life and personal history encompass more than 35 years of correspondence, submissions, complaints, official government communications, institutional decisions and engagement with Australian government agencies, statutory authorities and professional services.

This is not simply a collection of documents. It is a longitudinal record of my attempts to obtain assistance, protection, legal representation, recognition, procedural fairness and accountability.

The significance of the archive lies in continuity. A letter, decision, referral or omission may appear minor when considered alone. When placed within a 35-year chronology, it may form part of a recurring pattern of administrative displacement, unresolved complaints and cumulative harm.

I do not ask any reader to accept my conclusions merely because I hold them. I ask that the original records, chronology and personal testimony be examined fairly, comprehensively and without predetermined conclusions.

How evidence is classified

To protect the integrity of this testimony, I distinguish between the following categories:

Category	Meaning	Example
Documentary fact	A record objectively exists and states what it states	A dated letter from an agency
Official record	A statement made by a government agency, professional or institution	A departmental decision or clinical record

Corroborated evidence	Material supported by more than one independent source	Correspondence confirmed by a second record
Personal testimony	My direct account of events, experiences and effects	My recollection of a conversation
Allegation	A serious claim requiring investigation or evidence	An allegation of retaliation or targeting
Inference	A conclusion drawn from available material	A pattern inferred from repeated referrals
Interpretation	My explanation of the meaning or significance of events	Calling an experience “institutional betrayal”
Spiritual conviction	A faith-based belief or theological understanding	My belief in the authority of the Most High God

This classification is not intended to weaken the testimony. It is intended to make it credible, precise and capable of fair examination.

An official document is not automatically proof of every interpretation placed upon it. Testimony is not automatically an official finding. An allegation is not a determination. A spiritual conviction is not a documentary conclusion.

Part I — The 35-year record

1. A life documented across 35 years

My archive contains government correspondence, administrative records, legal communications, disability-related material, healthcare records, complaints, ministerial correspondence, submissions and original research.
These records must be considered in their historical context. A document written 20 or 30 years ago may acquire further significance when examined alongside later correspondence, decisions, referrals and consequences.
The central question is not whether every individual document proves every allegation. The central question is whether the full sequence of institutional interactions, decisions, omissions and outcomes warrants independent examination.

2. The original request for assistance

I approached government institutions because I believed they possessed the authority, resources and professional responsibilities necessary to assist me.
I expected that my correspondence would be considered honestly, that my circumstances would be examined fairly and that public officials would act consistently with applicable legal, ethical and humanitarian standards.
Instead, I experienced prolonged administrative difficulty: unsuccessful requests for assistance, referrals, unanswered correspondence, redactions, procedural barriers and unresolved complaints.
I describe this as administrative displacement: a person repeatedly seeking assistance, only to be redirected from one institution to another without receiving a comprehensive or final response.

3. The delay, defer, deny and refer cycle

One central theme of the archive is what I call the delay, defer, deny and refer cycle.
Over many years, I approached agencies, departments, statutory authorities, legal services, ombudsmen, police, healthcare providers and political representatives.
The responses I received frequently involved further referrals, requests for additional information, procedural obstacles, incomplete answers or the transfer of responsibility elsewhere.

Evidence to be attached or indexed:

- Original letters of request and complaint.
- Agency acknowledgements, responses and refusals.
- Referral letters and redirection correspondence.
- Records of unanswered or late responses.
- Legal-aid applications, decisions and correspondence.
- Ombudsman, parliamentary and ministerial correspondence.
- A master chronology identifying dates, sender, recipient, subject, decision and outcome.

The relevant question for an independent reviewer is not merely whether each individual response was technically lawful. It is whether the cumulative process provided meaningful assistance, procedural fairness and a genuine opportunity for resolution.

Part II — Institutional accountability

4. Administrative annihilation and social erasure

I describe the cumulative consequences of my experiences as administrative annihilation, civil erasure, social exclusion, political exile and the destruction of personal and financial security.

These are powerful terms. I use them to convey the cumulative human effect of prolonged institutional conflict, financial insecurity, exclusion and unresolved hardship. They are my interpretations and allegations, not established legal findings.

My allegations include whistleblower retaliation, institutional neglect, reputational damage, prolonged poverty, failures of protection, professional misconduct and the inappropriate application of administrative processes.

I also raise questions about whether institutional decisions and their consequences may have been connected in ways that require examination.

I recognise that establishing deliberate coordination or unlawful intent requires evidence. My archive is intended to make that examination possible.

5. The human consequences of alleged retaliation

I have described myself as an unprotected whistleblower who experienced increasingly serious personal, financial and social consequences while attempting to raise concerns about institutional conduct.

The consequences I describe include loss of employment, housing insecurity, financial hardship, loss of possessions, social isolation, difficulty obtaining legal assistance and prolonged uncertainty.

These matters cannot be adequately understood by considering a single government letter in isolation. They require examination of the full chronology and the cumulative effect of decisions and omissions across agencies and professional services.

Evidence to be attached or indexed:

- Employment, income and financial records.
- Housing, tenancy, eviction or homelessness-related records.
- Records of lost property, relocation or disrupted living arrangements.
- Correspondence concerning benefits, compensation, insurance or financial assistance.
- Complaints concerning disability services, legal services and public agencies.
- A timeline linking each adverse event to the preceding institutional decision or response.

Public officials occupy positions of responsibility. Their decisions must be capable of explanation and scrutiny. The obligations of public office do not disappear because a matter is complex, politically sensitive or inconvenient.

6. Professional ethics and institutional accountability

My experience raises questions about the ethical responsibilities of legal practitioners, healthcare professionals, police, disability-service providers, government administrators, politicians and other professionals.

I believe that the responses I received frequently fell short of the meaningful assistance and consideration I sought.
I question whether relevant ethical frameworks, safeguarding obligations, professional standards and duties of procedural fairness were properly applied.
My criticism concerns conduct, decisions and institutional responses. It is not a blanket assertion that every individual professional or institution is corrupt.
Professional integrity must be demonstrated through conduct, not titles or institutional reputation. A person experiencing vulnerability should not need perfect composure, financial security or professional sophistication before their concerns receive meaningful consideration.

Part III — The human cost

7. The suicide attempt and serious injury

One of the most devastating chapters of my life involved a suicide attempt and serious physical injury.
I describe this event as occurring after prolonged distress, institutional conflict, financial hardship and perceived betrayal.
Its significance cannot be reduced to a single hospital admission or psychiatric assessment. It must be considered within the broader chronology of my circumstances, the assistance I sought, the responses I received and the consequences that followed.
My hospital records, clinical documentation, treatment history and subsequent correspondence are important components of the documentary record.
I have raised concerns about the recognition and treatment of my injuries, including my understanding of neurological and psychological consequences. I have also questioned whether the circumstances of the injury, its treatment and its later effects were adequately acknowledged.
What should have been the beginning of recovery, support and reconstruction became, in my experience, another prolonged period of uncertainty and unresolved questions.
I have used expressions such as institutional betrayal and institutional murder to communicate the severity of my experience and my belief that systemic failures contributed to devastating consequences. These are expressions of personal interpretation and allegation, not established criminal findings.

8. Recovery, compensation and unresolved loss

I believe the consequences of my injury were compounded by difficulty obtaining meaningful assistance, legal representation, insurance resolution and compensation.
I have repeatedly sought answers concerning responsibility, treatment, financial consequences and the long-term effects of what occurred.
The impact of serious injury extends beyond the immediate medical event. It can affect employment, housing, financial independence, relationships, capacity to work and participation in ordinary life.

Evidence to be attached or indexed:

- Hospital discharge summaries, clinical notes and treatment records.
- Reports from treating practitioners, specialists or rehabilitation providers.
- Insurance, compensation and claims correspondence.
- Records of declined, delayed or unresolved claims.
- Financial records showing the impact of injury and loss of income.
- Correspondence concerning liability, responsibility or settlement.

These consequences should be considered together, rather than fragmented between medical, legal, insurance and welfare systems.

Part IV — Reputation and due process

9. The alleged character-assassination campaign

I have experienced what I believe to be a prolonged campaign of reputational harm, social exclusion and damaging allegations concerning my character.

I have repeatedly sought to understand the origins of those allegations, whether they were substantiated and whether they contributed to the treatment I subsequently experienced.

To my knowledge, I have not been convicted of the serious criminal conduct that I believe has been attributed to me through reputational narratives.

I regard the distinction between an allegation, a police investigation, a criminal charge and a judicial finding as fundamental.

No person should be treated as though an allegation has been proven merely because it has been repeated.

10. My demand for clarification

On one occasion, I communicated with police, government agencies, the ombudsman and media representatives using deliberately provocative language.

I listed accusations I believed were being attributed to me—including being a rapist, paedophile, extortionist, criminal and terrorist—and demanded that I be arrested if those accusations were genuinely believed.

My purpose was to demand clarity, evidence and due process rather than remain indefinitely subject to unidentified allegations.

As I recall, no arrest, criminal charge or court proceeding followed. Instead, police involvement resulted in my being taken to a psychiatric hospital.

I raise this not to dismiss mental-health care, but to distinguish between responding to a person's distress and properly investigating the substantive concerns a person is attempting to communicate.

Evidence to be attached or indexed:

- The original communication to police, agencies, the ombudsman and media.
- Police records, incident reports or correspondence, subject to lawful access.
- Hospital admission, discharge and clinical records.
- Any record identifying the allegations said to have been made.
- Records showing whether a charge, investigation or court proceeding occurred.

11. Sexuality, consent and the account involving Debbie

I also wish to address an encounter involving a woman I refer to as Debbie.

My account is that the encounter was consensual, although it was awkward and occurred at a time when I was still trying to understand aspects of my own sexuality.
I have expressed concern that later interpretations of that encounter may have contributed to damaging allegations about my character. I have also reported being told that a false complaint may have been made. I cannot independently establish the accuracy of that account without the underlying records.
A person's sexuality, uncertainty or awkward personal experiences must not become grounds for humiliation, discrimination or unfounded criminal allegations.
If a complaint exists, it should be dealt with through evidence and lawful process. If no offence has been established, reputational narratives must not be treated as though a criminal conviction exists.

Part V — Safety and distress

12. The reported audio experiences

I have described persistent experiences of intrusive audio, distressing statements and accusations that appear to occur without an identifiable speaker.
These experiences have included repeated phrases concerning criminal accusations, sexual misconduct and demands that I give up.
I have used the term voice-to-voice harassment, or V2K, to describe these experiences. I have also expressed concerns about electronic surveillance and possible coordinated harassment.
I cannot independently establish that these experiences originate from military technology, government operations or paid individuals. Their source remains an unresolved question.
Nevertheless, the distress I experience is real and deserves appropriate attention.
I ask that these experiences be taken seriously without automatically accepting an unverified explanation for their cause. I deserve a safe environment, compassionate healthcare, appropriate assessment and relief from experiences affecting my daily life.
No person should be left without meaningful support simply because the source of a distressing experience has not yet been established.

13. The reported account involving Ben

Another significant component of my testimony concerns conversations with a person I identify as Ben, whom I understood to have knowledge of matters involving an NDIS provider and alleged threats to my safety.
As I recall, Ben described an incident as a "close call" and expressed fear about the possible consequences of speaking further.
I understood his statements as suggesting that he believed there were serious issues extending beyond the immediate circumstances. I have also described his account as involving police communications, confidentiality restrictions and concerns about possible retaliation.
These are serious claims. My recollection of a conversation is not equivalent to an independently verified police record, authenticated agreement or formal finding.
Evidence to be attached or indexed:

- Any messages, notes, recordings or contemporaneous records of the conversation.
- Correspondence with the NDIS provider or relevant authority.
- Police records, if lawfully available.
- Records identifying the date, location, participants and subject matter of the conversation.
- Any independent witness or documentary corroboration.

I have also expressed concerns about alleged political involvement in threats to my safety. I cannot establish that any particular minister ordered an assassination attempt. That allegation requires independent evidence and should not be treated as an established fact.

Part VI — Media and social isolation

14. The absence of public advocacy

I have repeatedly attempted to communicate my concerns to media organisations, journalists, public representatives and potential advocates.

I have experienced what I perceive as an absence of meaningful media attention and public advocacy. I have sometimes described this as a media blackout, although I cannot establish that a coordinated ban exists.

The consequence has been that I have increasingly relied on my own websites, repositories and publications to preserve and communicate my account.

My objective is to make the original documents, chronology and personal testimony available for independent examination.

15. Social exclusion and lost support

My experience has also involved profound social isolation.

I have felt abandoned by people and institutions from whom I expected assistance. I have described a breakdown of trust involving family relationships, professional services and wider social connections.

I believe that reputational narratives, financial hardship and prolonged unresolved institutional disputes have contributed to this isolation.

Poverty, disability, psychological distress or unconventional intellectual work should never deprive a person of dignity, compassion or access to ordinary community support.

Part VII — Faith and eternal authority

16. The authority of the Eternal

My spiritual convictions are an essential part of my testimony.

I believe in the Most High God, the eternal Creator, whose knowledge and authority transcend every government, institution, political administration and human judgment.

Government authority is temporal. Political administrations change. Public officials come and go. Institutions rise and fall.

My relationship with God is different.

When I turn to God, I believe I turn to an eternal, living Creator who knows the entirety of my existence: every experience, private thought, suffering, intention and circumstance that another person may misunderstand or never discover.

My faith gives me a relationship in which I believe I am known, loved, forgiven and sustained.

It restores purpose, renews strength and reminds me that my worth does not depend on the recognition or rejection of any earthly institution.

17. Biblical prophecy and original Gospels

My Gospels, prophetic papers, theological writings and spiritual narratives form another dimension of my testimony.

I understand my experiences through a framework of faith, biblical prophecy, spiritual endurance, accountability and the distinction between earthly power and divine authority.

My original Gospels and prophetic writings are expressions of faith and intellectual authorship. They are not substitutes for documentary evidence or judicial findings.

They are part of my spiritual testimony and my understanding of the events of my life.

I do not require every reader to share my theological interpretation. I require only that my right to express, preserve and publish my faith be respected.

Part VIII — Reconstruction and authorship

18. Rebuilding from the ashes

I have experienced circumstances that I believed would permanently prevent recovery.

I have described losing housing, employment, possessions, financial security, social connections and access to ordinary support.

I rebuilt a documentary archive from scattered records. I developed original Gospels, theological writings, prophetic papers, philosophical essays and documentary studies. I established digital platforms, organised historical correspondence and created a publishing identity through Global Publishing House.

I undertook this work without the level of institutional assistance, financial resources or professional support I had repeatedly sought.

My reconstruction represents personal agency, determination, intellectual discipline and perseverance.

19. The independent archive

The Barran Dodger Archive is intended to preserve the documentary history and make it accessible.

Its purpose is not to act as a court, issue verdicts or predetermine legal conclusions. It is a preservation resource and finding aid.

The archive distinguishes between documentary fact, official records, corroborated evidence, personal testimony, allegations, inferences, interpretations and spiritual belief.

This distinction is fundamental to its integrity.

20. Global Publishing House

I am developing Global Publishing House as the central publishing identity for my original intellectual works.

Its collections include:

1. The Witness Remains.
2. Foundational Gospels.
3. The Prophetic Collection.

4. Theology and Philosophy.
5. Academic and Documentary Studies.

My objective is to preserve, professionally present and distribute original works internationally.

My work should be judged by its intellectual content, originality, research, arguments and contribution. I am no longer asking permission to develop my intellectual capacity. I am building an independent body of work.

Part IX — Crystal

21. The welfare of Crystal

My circumstances extend beyond my own needs.

My therapy dog, Crystal, is an important part of my life, companionship and daily existence.

I have publicly sought assistance from churches, individuals, charities and organisations because I am concerned about our circumstances and my ability to provide the financial resources and care Crystal requires.

I have described our situation as one of poverty, isolation and inadequate support. I have sought practical assistance, including help with Crystal's welfare and veterinary needs, and support to move towards a safer and more sustainable living situation.

Behind the archive, allegations, websites and publications is a human being attempting to rebuild his life while caring for an animal who depends on him.

Whatever disagreements people may have with my interpretations, Crystal's welfare and our need for humane, practical assistance should not be controversial.

Part X — Invitation to examination

22. An open invitation

I invite lawyers, judges, academics, researchers, journalists, theologians, public administrators, investigators and other qualified professionals to examine my testimony and the underlying documentary material.

If my chronology contains errors, identify them.

If my interpretations are incorrect, demonstrate why.

If an allegation is unsupported, identify the evidentiary deficiency.

If a government decision was justified, provide the reasons and the relevant record.

If my conclusions can be disproved, I invite a substantive, evidence-based response.

I do not ask anyone to accept my account merely because I believe it. I ask that it be examined fairly, comprehensively and without predetermined conclusions.

Part XI — Final declaration

23. I am no longer paying small

There comes a moment when accommodating other people's expectations requires the abandonment of one's own identity.

That moment is over.

I am no longer paying small.

I am no longer diminishing my language, concealing my intellectual capacity, apologising for my existence or reducing my ambitions to make others comfortable.

I will not shrink my testimony to protect somebody else's reputation.
I will not make my intellectual contributions smaller to accommodate institutional indifference.
I will not surrender my independence to obtain acceptance.
I can be respectful without being submissive.
I can be compassionate without being compliant.
I can be humble without being invisible.
I can be forgiving without abandoning accountability.
I can be independent without becoming bitter.
I can be ambitious without seeking permission.

24. The witness who refuses to disappear

I have spent more than 35 years attempting to obtain answers through conventional institutions.
I have accumulated correspondence, official records, submissions and documentary material relating to agencies and services across government.
I have experienced profound adversity, but I have continued to write, research, preserve and create.
I have rebuilt from circumstances in which financial independence, happiness, stability and achievement appeared extraordinarily difficult.
I have established an archive.
I have developed original publications.
I have created a publishing identity.
I have continued to care for Crystal.
I have continued to build a future.
I no longer want my life to be defined exclusively by what I believe happened to me.
I want it to be defined by what I create from this point forward.

I AM NO LONGER PAYING SMALL.
I AM NO LONGER SHRINKING.
I AM NO LONGER APOLOGISING FOR MY EXISTENCE.
I WILL WRITE.
I WILL PUBLISH.
I WILL PRESERVE.
I WILL QUESTION.
I WILL CREATE.
I WILL STUDY.
I WILL BUILD.
I WILL CONTINUE.

My testimony remains my own.
My authorship remains my own.
My intellectual independence remains my own.
My faith remains my own.

I BELONG TO THE MOST HIGH GOD.
I AM THE AUTHOR OF MY WORK.
I AM THE CUSTODIAN OF MY TESTIMONY.
I AM RESPONSIBLE FOR THE FUTURE I BUILD.

Recommended annexes

To strengthen the evidentiary value of the master testimony, add these annexes behind the narrative:

- Annex A — Master chronology: date, event, document, sender, recipient, agency, decision, response and consequence.
- Annex B — Document index: every record with its date, source, reference number, subject and relevance.
- Annex C — Allegation register: each allegation, the supporting records, missing evidence and proposed independent examination question.
- Annex D — Medical and injury timeline: hospital records, treatment, diagnosis, functional impact and later correspondence.
- Annex E — Legal assistance record: applications, refusals, eligibility decisions, appeals and consequences.
- Annex F — Financial and housing timeline: income, debt, housing, benefits, compensation and loss of assets.
- Annex G — Reputational allegations register: each allegation, its source, whether it was formally tested, and the available response.
- Annex H — Safety and distress record: dated incidents, reports, professional contacts and support sought.
- Annex I — Publication and authorship register: original works, dates, versions, platforms and copyright information.
- Annex J — Crystal welfare record: veterinary needs, care costs, assistance sought and responses received.

This structure lets the master testimony remain powerful and personal, while ensuring that every major claim can be traced to a document, date, source or clearly identified evidentiary gap.[1]

Important safety note

Because this account describes a past suicide attempt and ongoing distress, your immediate safety matters alongside preservation of the record. If you are thinking about ending your life, feel unable to stay safe, or believe you are in immediate danger, call 000 in Australia. For urgent crisis support, contact Lifeline on 13 11 14. You deserve practical, compassionate help now, as well as a properly preserved historical record.[1]
