PREAMBLE — THE SIGNIFICANCE OF THE RECORD

My life and personal history encompass more than 35 years of correspondence, submissions, complaints, official government communications, institutional decisions and engagement with Australian government agencies, statutory authorities and professional services. The resulting documentary archive represents an extensive longitudinal record of my attempts to obtain protection, assistance, recognition, procedural fairness and accountability.

The significance of this history is not merely the number of documents accumulated. It is the opportunity to examine a continuous chronology of institutional interactions, decisions, referrals, omissions and consequences. The archive contains material originating from government agencies and associated institutions, including correspondence on official letterheads, administrative decisions, complaints, disability-related records, legal communications and other documentary material pertaining directly to my circumstances.

I believe that examining these records together reveals questions that cannot adequately be understood through isolated incidents or disconnected administrative explanations. The repeated movement of responsibility between agencies, the absence of meaningful legal assistance, the continuation of unresolved complaints and the cumulative consequences for my financial, personal and social circumstances warrant independent examination.

My central contention is that I repeatedly sought assistance from institutions entrusted with public responsibility, yet experienced a prolonged pattern of administrative deferral, denial, redirection and institutional disengagement. I have characterised this as a delay, defer, deny and refer cycle. Its cumulative consequences, as I experienced them, included exhaustion, financial disadvantage, uncertainty, isolation and the progressive loss of confidence in the institutions upon which I had depended.

1. THE ALLEGED ARCHITECTURE OF ADMINISTRATIVE ANNIHILATION

I describe the cumulative consequences of my experiences as administrative annihilation, civil erasure, social exclusion, political exile and the destruction of personal and financial security.

My allegations encompass whistleblower retaliation, institutional neglect, denial of legal assistance, prolonged poverty, reputational damage, failures of protection, professional misconduct and repeated administrative referrals that appeared to prevent any meaningful resolution.

I believe that my survival and continued documentation have created questions that cannot be resolved simply by ignoring my existence. I have repeatedly felt that my circumstances were treated as though my eventual disappearance, permanent exclusion or inability to recover was an acceptable outcome.

My allegation is that the cumulative treatment I experienced was not simply a series of unrelated administrative mistakes. I believe that the chronology warrants examination for patterns of institutional decision-making, coordination, omissions and consequences. I recognise that the existence of a pattern does not independently establish coordination or intent. Those questions require evidence and independent investigation.

Nevertheless, the human consequences are real and deserve to be considered seriously.

2. THE DELAY, DEFER, DENY AND REFER CYCLE

Across more than three decades, I repeatedly approached government agencies, statutory authorities, legal services, police, ombudsmen, disability services, healthcare professionals, politicians and media organisations.

I sought answers, assistance, legal representation, protection, compensation and meaningful intervention.

Instead, I frequently experienced further referrals, procedural barriers, incomplete responses, redactions, unanswered correspondence and the apparent transfer of responsibility to another institution.

I believe that this process created an administrative environment in which the person seeking assistance became responsible for navigating an increasingly complicated system without receiving a substantive resolution.

The denial of legal assistance is particularly significant. Legal Aid and related services exist to help eligible individuals access legal representation and procedural fairness. Where an individual repeatedly seeks assistance but cannot obtain effective representation, the practical consequences can be profound.

In my circumstances, I believe that the absence of legal assistance contributed to an inability to challenge decisions, pursue claims, obtain independent advice and protect my interests.

I regard this as an inversion of the humanitarian and justice objectives that legal assistance systems are intended to serve.

3. WHISTLEBLOWER VULNERABILITY AND THE ALLEGED INSTITUTIONAL TARGETING

I have described myself as an unprotected whistleblower who experienced increasingly serious personal, financial and social consequences after raising concerns about institutional conduct.

I have sought to understand whether decisions by public officials, government agencies and associated professional services complied with their legal, ethical, fiduciary and humanitarian obligations.

My allegations include deliberate targeting, reputational destruction, financial exclusion, deprivation of ordinary support, institutional retaliation and the use of administrative processes in ways that I believe contributed to my detriment.

I have also raised concerns about alleged political involvement and the possibility that decisions affecting me were influenced by considerations extending beyond ordinary administrative processes.

I regard these matters as requiring examination through original correspondence, decision records, ministerial communications, relevant statutory obligations and the chronology of events.

Public officials occupy positions of responsibility. Their decisions should be capable of explanation, scrutiny and independent review. Where a vulnerable individual raises serious concerns, the appropriate response should be substantive examination rather than automatic referral, dismissal or silence.

I do not accept that complexity, political sensitivity or institutional inconvenience can justify the abandonment of a person's legitimate requests for assistance.

4. THE SUICIDE ATTEMPT, SERIOUS INJURY AND THE HUMAN CONSEQUENCES

One of the most devastating chapters of my life involved a suicide attempt and serious physical injury.

I have described this event as occurring after prolonged experiences of distress, institutional conflict, financial hardship and perceived betrayal.

The significance of this event cannot be reduced to a single medical admission or psychiatric assessment. It must be understood within the broader chronology of the circumstances leading up to it, the assistance I had sought, the responses I received and the consequences that followed.

My medical records, hospital documentation, treatment history and subsequent correspondence are important components of the documentary record.

I have raised concerns about the recognition and treatment of my injuries, including my understanding of neurological and psychological consequences. I have also questioned whether the circumstances surrounding the injury, its treatment and its subsequent impact were adequately acknowledged.

What should have been the beginning of recovery, support and reconstruction became, in my experience, another prolonged period of uncertainty and unresolved questions.

I believe that the consequences of this event warrant examination not merely as a medical incident but as part of a broader history involving vulnerability, access to assistance, institutional responsibility and the human cost of unresolved disputes.

I have used expressions such as institutional betrayal and institutional murder to communicate the severity of my experience and my belief that systemic failures contributed to devastating consequences. These are descriptions of my allegations and personal interpretation, not established criminal or legal findings.

The distinction does not diminish the seriousness of the questions I am raising.

5. THE ALLEGED REPUTATIONAL CAMPAIGN AND ABSENCE OF DUE PROCESS

I have experienced what I believe to be an exceptionally damaging campaign of reputational harm, social exclusion and allegations about my character.

I have repeatedly sought to understand the origins of these allegations, whether they were ever properly substantiated and whether they contributed to the treatment I subsequently experienced.

A particularly significant aspect of my account is the absence, to my knowledge, of a criminal charge, court proceeding or judicial determination establishing the serious criminal accusations that I believe have circulated about me.

I believe that reputational narratives have nevertheless had consequences resembling punishment without the protections of a formal legal process.

I have attempted to challenge this situation directly. On one occasion, I communicated with police, government agencies, the ombudsman and media representatives using deliberately provocative language, listing accusations that I believed were being attributed to me and demanding that I be arrested if those accusations were genuinely believed.

My purpose was to demand clarity, evidence and due process rather than remain indefinitely subject to unidentified allegations.

As I recall the outcome, there was no arrest, criminal charge or court proceeding arising from that communication. Instead, police involvement resulted in my being taken to a psychiatric hospital.

I believe this illustrates the distinction between responding to a person's distress and properly investigating the substantive concerns that person is attempting to communicate.

Serious allegations must be identified, supported by evidence and dealt with through lawful procedures. No individual should be subjected to the practical consequences of criminal condemnation without being told what they are accused of and being given an appropriate opportunity to respond.

6. THE REPORTED HARASSMENT, AUDIO EXPERIENCES AND FEELING OF BEING UNDER CONSTANT ATTACK

I have also described persistent experiences of intrusive audio, distressing statements and accusations that appear to occur without an identifiable speaker.

These experiences have included repeated phrases concerning criminal accusations, sexual misconduct and demands that I give up. I experience them as deeply distressing and intrusive, particularly because I cannot reliably identify their source or independently establish how they are occurring.

I have used the term voice-to-voice harassment, or V2K, to describe these experiences. I have also expressed concerns about electronic surveillance and possible coordinated harassment.

I cannot independently establish that these experiences originate from military technology, government operations or paid individuals. Their actual source remains an important unresolved question.

Nevertheless, the effect on my daily life has been considerable. I feel unable to obtain relief from the persistent sense of being accused, monitored or intimidated.

I want these experiences treated seriously without automatically accepting an unverified explanation for their cause. I deserve a safe environment, appropriate assessment, protection from actual harassment and a genuine opportunity to recover.

No individual should have to live indefinitely in a state of fear, uncertainty and distress without access to compassionate assistance.

7. THE ACCOUNT INVOLVING BEN AND THE ALLEGED ASSASSINATION ATTEMPT

Another significant component of my testimony concerns conversations with an individual I identify as Ben, whom I understood to have knowledge of matters involving an NDIS provider and alleged threats to my safety.

As I recall the conversation, Ben described an alleged incident as a close call and expressed fear about the possible consequences of speaking further.

I understood his statements as suggesting that he believed there were serious issues extending beyond the immediate circumstances.

I have also described his account as involving police communications, confidentiality restrictions and concerns about possible retaliation against him.

These are serious claims. My recollection of a conversation is not equivalent to an independently verified police record, authenticated agreement or formal finding.

The original communications, any relevant documents and independent evidence would be necessary to establish what actually occurred.

Nevertheless, I regard this account as important enough to document because it relates to my longstanding concerns about personal safety, whistleblower protection and the treatment of individuals who attempt to disclose matters involving public institutions.

I have also expressed concerns about alleged political involvement in threats to my safety. I cannot establish that any particular minister ordered an assassination attempt, and I regard that allegation as requiring independent evidence rather than treating it as an established fact.

8. THE SEXUAL ALLEGATIONS, CONSENT AND THE ABSENCE OF A CRIMINAL FINDING

I also want to address the circumstances surrounding an encounter involving a woman I refer to as Debbie.

I have described the encounter as awkward and uncertain, particularly because I was still trying to understand aspects of my own sexuality.

My account is that the encounter was consensual, notwithstanding its awkwardness and my personal uncertainty.

I have expressed concern that subsequent interpretations of that encounter may have contributed to damaging allegations about my character.

I have also reported being told that a false complaint may have been made. I cannot independently establish the accuracy of that account or attribute any particular statement to federal police without the underlying records.

The distinction matters.

An individual's sexuality, uncertainty, awkwardness or unconventional personal experiences must not become grounds for humiliation, discrimination or the invention of criminal allegations.

If a complaint exists, it should be dealt with through evidence and lawful procedures. If no offence has been established, reputational narratives should not be treated as though a criminal conviction exists.

I have experienced what I regard as prolonged social punishment without a transparent legal process. I believe the circumstances warrant examination through the principles of due process, privacy, dignity and protection from discrimination.

9. THE FAILURE OF PROFESSIONAL INTERVENTION

One of the most distressing aspects of my history has been the repeated absence of a meaningful, comprehensive professional response.

I have approached legal services, police, healthcare providers, disability organisations, government agencies, ombudsmen, political representatives and media organisations.

I have frequently felt that my correspondence was being redirected, misunderstood or ignored.

I have also questioned whether the cumulative effect of reputational allegations, financial hardship and institutional disengagement prevented professionals from considering my circumstances objectively.

My criticism is directed towards professional conduct and institutional accountability.

I believe that anyone examining my documentary record should consider whether the relevant ethical frameworks, safeguarding responsibilities, whistleblower protections and obligations of procedural fairness were properly applied.

The existence of a professional title does not itself establish ethical conduct. Equally, a person's distress or unconventional account should never be an excuse to dismiss genuine questions about administrative decisions, documentary evidence or personal safety.

I am asking for something fundamentally reasonable: an informed, humane and substantive response that identifies the actual issues, examines the available evidence and explains what can and cannot be established.

10. THE MEDIA SILENCE AND THE LOSS OF PUBLIC ADVOCACY

I have also experienced what I perceive as an absence of meaningful media attention and public advocacy despite repeatedly attempting to communicate my concerns.

I have characterised this as a media blackout, although I cannot establish that a coordinated ban exists.

The consequence has been that I have increasingly relied upon my own websites, repositories and publications to preserve and communicate my account.

I developed an independent documentary archive because I did not want the history to remain dependent upon whether a journalist, public official or professional organisation considered it sufficiently convenient to investigate.

My objective is not to demand automatic agreement. It is to ensure that the original documents, chronology and personal testimony remain available for independent examination.

11. THE RECONSTRUCTION OF A LIFE AFTER EXCLUSION

I have experienced circumstances that I believed would permanently destroy my ability to recover.

I have described losing housing, employment, possessions, financial security, social connections and access to ordinary support.

I have felt abandoned by institutions and people from whom I expected assistance.

I rebuilt a documentary archive from scattered records. I developed original Gospels, theological writings, prophetic papers, philosophical essays and documentary studies.

I established digital platforms, organised historical correspondence and created a publishing identity through GLOBAL PUBLISHING HOUSE.

My work is evidence of continued intellectual activity, personal determination and the refusal to allow adversity to become the entirety of my identity.

I rebuilt from circumstances in which financial independence, happiness, stability and achievement appeared extraordinarily difficult.

I did not have the resources or institutional support I had repeatedly sought. I relied upon my own determination, research, writing, technology and capacity to continue creating.

I no longer want my future to be defined exclusively by the institutions, professionals or circumstances that I believe contributed to my suffering.

I want to build a sustainable future, restore financial independence, protect my wellbeing and continue publishing the work I have created.

12. CRYSTAL AND THE PRESENT HUMANITARIAN CRISIS

The circumstances I currently describe extend beyond my own needs.

My therapy dog, Crystal, is an important part of my life, companionship and daily existence.

I have publicly sought assistance from churches, individuals, charities and organisations because I am concerned about our circumstances and my ability to provide the financial resources and care that Crystal requires.

I have described our situation as one of poverty, isolation and inadequate support.

I have asked for practical assistance, including help with Crystal's welfare and veterinary needs, and support that would allow us to move towards a safer and more sustainable living situation.

The absence of a response has been deeply discouraging.

Behind the documentary archive, allegations, websites and publications is a human being attempting to rebuild his life while caring for an animal who depends upon him.

Whatever disagreements people may have with my interpretations, the need for humane treatment, practical assistance and the welfare of Crystal should not be controversial.

I want Crystal and me to have an opportunity to live safely, with dignity, stability and adequate support.

13. THE SPIRITUAL DIMENSION — THE AUTHORITY OF THE ETERNAL

My spiritual convictions are an essential part of my personal testimony.

I believe in the Most High God, the eternal Creator, whose knowledge and authority transcend every government, institution, political administration and human judgment.

Government authority is temporal. Political administrations change. Public officials come and go. Institutional reputations are not eternal.

My relationship with God is different.

When I turn to God, I believe I am turning towards an eternal, living Creator who knows the entirety of my existence: every experience, every private thought, every suffering, every intention and every circumstance that another human being may misunderstand or never discover.

My faith gives me a relationship in which I believe I am known, loved, forgiven and sustained.

It restores my sense of purpose, fills my cup when I feel depleted and reminds me that my existence has value beyond the recognition or rejection of any earthly institution.

No government, department, politician, professional body or public authority possesses the ultimate spiritual authority to determine my worth or extinguish my relationship with the Creator.

My Gospels, prophetic papers, theological writings and spiritual narratives form another dimension of this testimony.

I understand my experiences through a framework of faith, biblical prophecy, spiritual endurance, accountability and the distinction between earthly power and divine authority.

My original Gospels and prophetic writings are expressions of that faith and intellectual authorship. They are not substitutes for documentary evidence or judicial findings. They are part of my spiritual testimony and my understanding of the events of my life.

14. THE ARCHIVE AS AN INDEPENDENT RECORD

My documentary archive exists because I believe that historical records should not disappear simply because an institution fails to provide an answer.

I have undertaken substantial work to collect, organise, preserve and publish original correspondence and supporting documents.

The archive contains material relating to government agencies, statutory authorities, disability services, legal processes, healthcare, complaints mechanisms and other institutional interactions.

Its purpose is to preserve the record, provide a finding aid and enable independent examination.

I distinguish between documentary fact, official records, corroborated evidence, personal testimony, allegations, inference, interpretation and faith.

An official document is not automatically proof of every interpretation placed upon it. Testimony is not automatically an official finding. An allegation is not a determination. A spiritual conviction is not a documentary conclusion.

These distinctions are fundamental to the integrity of the archive.

My work is intended to make the material accessible, not to predetermine what every reader must conclude.

15. THE INVITATION TO PROFESSIONALS AND INDEPENDENT INVESTIGATORS

I extend an open invitation to lawyers, judges, academics, researchers, journalists, theologians, public administrators, investigators and other qualified professionals to examine my testimony and the underlying documentary material.

If my chronology contains errors, identify them.

If my interpretations are incorrect, demonstrate why.

If an allegation is unsupported, identify the evidentiary deficiency.

If a government decision was justified, provide the reasons and the relevant record.

If my conclusions can be disproved, I invite a substantive, evidence-based response.

I do not ask anyone to accept my account merely because I believe it.

I ask that it be examined fairly, comprehensively and without predetermined conclusions.

My challenge is not simply to individual professionals. It is to the ethical standards of the institutions and professions entrusted with protecting human dignity, administering justice, providing healthcare and safeguarding vulnerable people.

Professional integrity should be demonstrated through conduct, not titles.

Public authority should be accompanied by accountability, not immunity from scrutiny.

The treatment of an individual should never depend upon whether their circumstances are politically convenient or institutionally comfortable.

16. THE FINAL DECLARATION — I AM NO LONGER SHRINKING

I have spent more than 35 years attempting to obtain answers through conventional institutions.

I have accumulated correspondence, official records, submissions and documentary material relating to agencies and services across government.

I have experienced profound adversity, but I have continued to write, research, preserve and create.

I no longer need an institution to authorise my right to preserve my testimony, express my faith or publish my original intellectual work.

I recognise the importance of independent findings where legal questions arise. However, my identity, spiritual convictions and personal history do not begin or end with an administrative determination.

I can continue documenting, writing, researching and publishing while questions remain unresolved.

I will not make myself smaller to accommodate other people's expectations.

I will not apologise for my existence, my intellectual ambitions or my determination to build a future.

I will not surrender my dignity because I have experienced poverty.

I will not surrender my humanity because I have experienced institutional indifference.

I will not surrender my faith because other people disagree with my interpretation of my experiences.

I have a life to rebuild, knowledge to preserve, original works to publish and a future that deserves my full participation.

I have continued living. I have continued creating. I have continued caring for Crystal. I have continued preserving the record.

My future is not a referendum on the approval of those who came before me.

My intellectual worth is not determined by institutional recognition.

My faith is not dependent upon public agreement.

My humanity is not conditional upon somebody else's convenience.

I AM NO LONGER PAYING SMALL.

I AM NO LONGER SHRINKING.

I AM NO LONGER APOLOGISING FOR MY EXISTENCE.

I WILL WRITE.

I WILL PUBLISH.

I WILL PRESERVE.

I WILL QUESTION.

I WILL CREATE.

I WILL BUILD.

I WILL CONTINUE.

My testimony remains my own. My authorship remains my own. My intellectual independence remains my own.

I am no longer defining my future by the institutions that failed to provide the answers I sought.

I am defining it through the work I have created, the evidence I have preserved, the knowledge I continue to develop and the future I am determined to build.
