

DR RICHARD WILLIAM McLEAN · BARRAN DODGER

I did not need permission to rise

An evidentiary essay on vision, corpus, and the record · 9 October 2026Finding aid. Not a court. Not a verdict. A link is not a finding.

1. The vision, stated as the author's account

My vision, sustained by my faith in God and aligned with what I understand to be His purpose for my life, has been examined through an AI analysis of my published websites and documentary corpus. That analysis indicates an assessed potential value in the hundreds of thousands of dollars. I do not present that assessment as a confirmed commercial valuation or a realised market price. I present it as an analytical assessment of the potential value of the intellectual, documentary, historical and creative body of work I have produced and preserved.

The published assessment that matches this description is the Forensic AI Digital Archive Value Assessment of 8 October 2026, recorded at 20:38:40 Australian Eastern Daylight Time. It is on the repository: FORENSIC-AI-DIGITAL-ARCHIVE-VALUE-ASSESSMENT-8-OCTOBER-2026.txt. The reading page states on its face that it is an indicative replacement and creation-value assessment, not a certified valuation, and not a finding: forensic-ai-digital-archive-value-assessment-8-october-2026.html. The stamp record says the same, and records the PDF digest: stamp record.

What that file actually says, and this is a record fact from the text read for this essay, is a central indicative figure of A$350,000, a low of A$175,000, and a high of A$500,000 to A$650,000 or more. It says historical and cultural value is not responsibly monetisable. It says the figure is a replacement and creation-value assessment, not a certified professional valuation, and not a prediction of a sale price. It says a figure in the assessment is not a finding that a contested proposition is true. The phrase "hundreds of thousands" is therefore a fair description of the published range. It is not a sale. It is not a court figure. It is not evidence that any institution accepted the value.

The assessment also says it revised an earlier central figure of A$300,000 upward after looking at the GitHub structure. That revision is the assessment's own statement. This essay does not re-perform the valuation.

2. What the corpus existence establishes

I claim something more fundamental than a price: that the corpus exists, that it is published, that it can be examined, and that its existence can no longer be erased by a refusal to acknowledge it. Those sentences can be tested.

The presentation repository exists and is public: wezzo72/Barrandodger. Its README says it is a website presentation and does not replace the original evidence stores. It says original evidence must remain preserved. It points to the primary archive and to the mirror: README.md. The mirror repository is public: wezzo72/Backup. The README recount of 4 October 2026 said the tree then held 5,583 files, including 2,840 PDFs and 1,813 HTML files, and that docs/official-drive held 95 PDFs. It said a filename is not a finding.

The 8 October assessment, reading the repository's own inventory, states different and later figures: 3,215 unique complete PDFs, 10,001 PDF instances including mirrors, 21,197 archive-path file instances, 8,819 unique archive-path blobs, material across 8 repositories, 2,655 SHA256SUMS lines, and a 660-page crawl of the former site. It also says earlier published totals, including 2,840 PDFs and 5,583 files, were counts for one repository at an earlier pass, and that some project-reported figures were not reproduced by that inventory. Those distinctions are in the assessment. They are why this essay does not add the figures together.

The allegation matrix on the same site records 150 items and the finding none declared: data/allegation-matrix.json. The timeline says a filename date is not a verified event date: data/timeline.json. The organisation list says a name on a filename is not a finding: data/organisations.json.

Record fact: a public corpus exists, is linked, and can be examined. Not established: that any institution has acknowledged its value, or that refusal to acknowledge it is the same thing as an attempt to erase it. Silence is not, without a schedule of approaches and replies, proof of a decision to ignore.

3. The assessment is not the institutions' answer

The vision says that even this potentially substantial value, and the historical significance I believe accompanies it, has received little meaningful acknowledgment from the institutions and society that once benefited from my abilities. The belief about historical significance is the author's. The acknowledgment claim is testable only against responses.

No file opened for the 9 October examination is an institutional letter valuing the corpus. The NDIA letter of 20 November 2025 approves a plan. It does not value the archive: NDIS plan approval. The Legal Aid letter of 14 January 2026 advises on the Public Guardian. It does not discuss the corpus: Legal Aid advice. The LECC letter of 19 November 2025 closes a complaint for jurisdiction. It does not mention the archive: LECC letter.

Inference, labelled: the opened institutional letters do not acknowledge the corpus. That is not a survey of every institution. The media catalogue does not list a mainstream investigation: data/media.json. Absence from that catalogue is not proof that no report exists.

4. Survival and the archive, as acts that can be pointed to

I did not require their permission to rise from the ashes of the destruction I believe government institutions designed, society participated in, and the systems responsible for protecting me ultimately left me to endure. I survived what was supposed to diminish me. I continued to create when I had been given reasons to stop. I preserved what others might have expected to disappear. I built an archive where there had been abandonment, testimony where there had been silence, and a body of work where others may have expected only disappearance.

The belief that institutions designed destruction is an author allegation. It is not established by the existence of the archive. The archive's own indexes refuse that upgrade. What is established is that the work was published without an institutional grant of permission visible in the opened files. The repositories are public. The preservation rule is the author's rule, written into the README, not a rule issued by an agency.

The opened records show a person still corresponding, still receiving decisions, and still publishing. They do not show the interior of anyone's intention. Design and intention are not in a jurisdictional letter.

5. The cage, tested against the documents rather than the metaphor

I am now approaching a level of financial, intellectual and historical reality that, on the AI assessment of the published corpus, may force those who dismissed me to confront a possibility they previously could not see: that I saw something they could not, that I understood something they failed to recognise, and that I outgrew the cage of brokenness in which they left me. I do not claim that an AI assessment establishes future financial success. I claim that the corpus exists and can be examined.

The cage, if it is to be more than a metaphor, has to be a set of decisions. The decisions opened on 9 October 2026 are these.

The Law Enforcement Conduct Commission wrote on 19 November 2025, reference CASE202512395/13KM, that the complaint did not concern officers of the NSW Police Force or the NSW Crime Commission, was outside jurisdiction, and that no action would be taken on the information given. Link: LECC letter. That is a closure. It is not a finding of police misconduct, and it is not a finding that the closure was unlawful.

A Victorian Ombudsman file applies section 29A of the Ombudsman Act 1973 (Vic) and does not release complaint documents. The requester's characterisations in that file are not findings. Link: Victorian Ombudsman file.

A Commonwealth Ombudsman file shows letterhead, reference 2024-706941, the date 8 August 2025, and a heading consistent with a decision to restrict, behind an author cover. The cover's suppression claims were not adopted. Link:

service-restriction file.

The NDIA wrote on 20 November 2025 that a plan for Richard William McLean had been approved from that day to 19 November 2026, with a stated total funding amount of $366,406.69. Link: plan approval. An approval is not delivery. It is also not a decline. It sits awkwardly beside a metaphor of total confinement, and the awkwardness is kept. A person can hold an approved plan and still be in a guardianship dispute.

On 14 January 2026 Legal Aid NSW wrote to Mr Barran Dodger, reference ADV-2229668/CI-1162053, about a legal problem with the Public Guardian and guardianship orders. It recorded his account that orders had been in place since October 2025, that he was not happy with them, that a support coordinator had located supported independent living in Sydney, and that he understood the Public Guardian to have indicated a verbal no. It advised a 28-day review path and said that on the medical evidence then provided he was unlikely to satisfy the merit test for a grant of aid. Link: Legal Aid letter. The account is the adviser's record of what he said. It is not a Public Guardian decision. No Public Guardian decision was opened.

On 20 January 2026 Brian Woods, Chief Executive Officer, signed a certificate under section 122(2) of the NSW Trustee and Guardian Act 2009. It certifies that on 16 October 2024 NCAT committed management of the estate of Barran Resonance Dodger to NSW Trustee and Guardian, and that the estate remained under management. Matter 658238:CSD. Link: section 122 certificate. Estate management is not a guardianship order. The certificate does not set out participation.

The file catalogued as an IBAC rejection did not open as an IBAC letter. No IBAC quotation is invented. Catalogue path: DOC-0007 in documents.json.

What the cage metaphor can honestly rest on: opened process outcomes in which oversight bodies closed, excluded, or restricted particular approaches; a certificate of continuing estate management; and advice that a merits grant for representation was unlikely. What it cannot yet rest on: a proved design, a proved social participation in that design, or a proved intention that the person would never rise.

6. Chains, complicity, and the demand for the record

The chains I describe are not only personal metaphors. They are what I understand as the cumulative effects of institutional complicity, corruption, indifference and greed, and of the protection that arises when institutions are more concerned with preserving themselves than with the consequences of their decisions. I undertake to substantiate those assertions through the documentary record rather than ask the reader to accept them because I have made them.

That undertaking is accepted, and it is applied against the author as well as against the institutions. Complicity, corruption, and greed are not established by a filename. The allegation matrix says none declared. The laws catalogue says presence of an Act is not a finding of violation: data/laws.json. The 8 October assessment says substantive allegations were not used to inflate the monetary figure. This essay follows that rule.

The names, dates, and agencies that can be linked today are the names and dates in the opened letters and in the timeline. The timeline is the index, not the proof: data/timeline.json. The earlier examination, which quotes the LECC letter and grades the other opened files, is itself on the repository: expanded examination PDF.

7. What was left behind became a record

I did not remain beneath the institutions, assumptions and people that I believe sought to contain me. I outgrew the cage of brokenness in which I was left. I transformed exclusion into testimony, deprivation into documentation, abandonment into an archive, and survival into a body of work capable of being examined after the institutions have ceased to control the narrative.

The transformation that can be pointed to is the publication. Testimony, documentation, and archive are the repositories and the files linked above. Whether exclusion and abandonment were the cause is the author's interpretation. The record that can be examined is the record that was published. Control of the narrative is not a legal finding. What is true in a narrower sense is that a public GitHub repository is not an agency file. An agency cannot unpublish it by closing a complaint.

What was treated as insignificance became documentation only if the reader accepts the premise of insignificance. The opened NDIA letter treats the person as a participant with an approved plan. The Trustee certificate treats the named person as a managed person. Those are not the same thing as insignificance. They are institutional acts of a different kind. The essay keeps both.

8. Permission

I did not need permission to survive. I did not need permission to create. I did not need permission to preserve the truth as I experienced it. And I did not need permission to rise. Whatever financial value the corpus ultimately achieves, and whatever historical judgment posterity reaches, will be determined beyond the control of those who once assumed that exclusion, poverty, institutional barriers or abandonment would permanently reduce me to silence.

The permission sentences are the author's. No opened file is a grant or refusal of permission to publish. Poverty and homelessness appear as the author's account inside the Legal Aid letter and as request language inside the Victorian Ombudsman file. They are not findings of this essay. The financial value that is published is the indicative range already cited. Posterity's judgment is not a document.

I survived their expectations. I preserved my record. I built beyond the cage. And now the record exists for others to examine.

That last sentence is the one this essay can adopt without a change of status. The record exists. The links in this essay are the means of examination. Examination is not agreement. A link is not a finding.

Colophon

Faith and purpose are the author's. The A$350,000 figure is the published assessment's central indicative number, not a price. Institutional design, complicity, corruption, and greed are allegations until a document establishes them. The corpus is public. Finding aid. Not a court. Not a verdict. Appearance is not a finding.
