

THE WITNESS REMAINS- A Eulogy for Dr Barran Dodger

Dr Richard William McLean — Writer, Researcher, Whistleblower, Advocate and Witness

This is a tribute to a life and body of work. It is not a prediction that the life described here is ending.

There are lives that can be summarised by a profession, a qualification, a family name or a list of achievements. And there are lives that cannot be understood without listening to the person who lived them.

The life of Dr Richard William McLean, who writes and publishes under the name Dr Barran Dodger, belongs in the second category.

His story is not a simple story of triumph, nor is it a story that can honestly be reduced to illness, controversy, accusation or institutional conflict. It is the story of a person who has tried to preserve his identity, his intellectual work, his memories and his account of events while seeking recognition, protection and a fair hearing.

He has been a journalist and news graphics artist, an author, an artist, a researcher, an educator, a mental-health advocate and a disability-support practitioner. He completed a PhD at Victoria University in 2020, examining questions concerning the ethics of artificial intelligence and posthumanism against the background of global catastrophic risks and the Anthropocene, through the ethical perspectives of young people. His work reflects an enduring interest in how societies decide what matters, whose voices count, and what obligations human beings owe one another.

His writing has also been personal. In Recovered, Not Cured: A Journey Through Schizophrenia, he sought to describe an experience of mental illness in his own words. He has described the book as receiving recognition and being used in medical education. Whatever the reader's view of any individual account, the work represents a determination to place lived experience into public discussion rather than leave it entirely to other people to interpret.

Over the years, he has written and assembled works including Betrayed, Murdered, Forsaken, The Architecture of Administrative Annihilation, The Gospel of the Love Chain, The Gospel of Barran Dodger, Declaration of Sovereign Vindication, The Man They Mistook for His Wound, and They Could Not Erase What God Preserved. These titles reveal the recurring subjects of his work: betrayal, survival, institutional power, memory, dignity, faith, and the struggle to retain authorship of one's own life.

Some of his writing is documentary. Some is autobiographical. Some is political or philosophical. Some is prophetic and spiritual. Those different forms should not be confused with one another. His religious convictions are part of his testimony and should be preserved as such, without requiring every reader to share them or treating faith as a substitute for documentary verification.

For Barran Dodger, the archive became a way of refusing disappearance.

The repository bearing his name brings together correspondence, official documents, administrative records, statements, research, essays, preservation copies and material he believes is relevant to his complaints. It seeks to preserve records and make them accessible to journalists, researchers, lawyers, advocates, historians, public officials and the public. Its own stated principle is important: a finding aid is not a court, and a file name is not a finding.

That distinction is central to his legacy. The archive should not ask the public to accept every allegation simply because it has been recorded. It should allow people to inspect the underlying documents, understand their origins, compare accounts, identify what is corroborated, and see what remains unresolved. A fair investigation must be willing to examine evidence that supports a claim and evidence that complicates or contradicts it.

Barran Dodger has described experiences of isolation, disability, hardship, conflict with services and difficulty obtaining the responses he sought from institutions. These are serious matters to document and assess. His allegations about particular people and organisations require careful, independent examination; no person should be declared guilty merely because their name appears in his archive. Equally, a person who makes a complaint should not be dismissed merely because their account is uncomfortable, complicated or disputed.

His request, at its core, is that the record be read.

Not merely the titles. Not merely the most dramatic statements. Not merely the conclusions he has drawn. The records themselves: who wrote them, when they were written, what they actually say, what decisions followed, what responses were received, and what questions remain unanswered.

That is the work of preservation. It is also the work of fairness.

His life has not been only a struggle against institutions. It has also been a life of ideas, books, art, research, advocacy and attempts to give language to experiences that are difficult to communicate. It has included relationships, kindnesses, disappointments, ordinary human needs, and the companionship of his dog, Crystal. These things matter because no person is only a case file, a complaint, a diagnosis, a dispute or a public identity.

The name Barran Dodger is the name under which he has chosen to build a public record. Behind that name is Richard William McLean: a human being whose life cannot be fully captured by the most painful chapters of his history.

His faith has also shaped his understanding of survival. He has interpreted his continued existence through the language of God, providence, purpose and witness. Those beliefs belong to his personal testimony. They should be recorded respectfully, without using them to predetermine what the evidence establishes or to suggest that suffering was necessary, deserved or ordained.

The words They Could Not Erase What God Preserved express his spiritual interpretation of endurance. The title The Witness Remains expresses a parallel documentary purpose: that records should remain available for examination even when the person who assembled them is tired, unheard or no longer able to explain them.

The public work associated with his name now has several connected dimensions. The documentary archive preserves and organises the record. The rebuild provides another route into that material. The Church of Barran Dodger carries the spiritual and ministry dimension, including his Gospels and prophetic writings. The Church of Barran Dodger — Global Ministry & Publishing House — represents his stated ambition to publish and distribute his work internationally. These parts should be presented with clarity about their different purposes: documentary evidence, personal testimony, spiritual teaching and publication.

If this work is to endure, it must do more than repeat pain. It must preserve the source material, make its organisation understandable, protect people's privacy where appropriate, distinguish evidence from inference, correct errors when they are identified, and leave space for independent scrutiny. That is how an archive can become useful to people who do not already agree with its author.

The measure of a life is not whether every institution eventually agrees with the person who challenged it. Nor is it whether every allegation is ultimately sustained. A more enduring measure is what a person tried to contribute, what questions they insisted should be asked, what work they left behind, and whether others are willing to examine that work honestly.

Dr Barran Dodger has asked to be heard while he is alive, not merely explained after he is gone. That request deserves to be taken seriously. His health, safety, dignity and access to appropriate care matter now. His archive should be preserved as a living body of work, not treated as a substitute for the living person.

If these words are ever read as a eulogy, let them not be used to turn an unresolved life into a closed case. Let them instead be a call to preserve the record responsibly, investigate what can be investigated, acknowledge what can be established, correct what is wrong, and leave unproven matters open rather than manufacture certainty.

Let those who encounter his work remember the writer and researcher, the advocate and artist, the man behind the archive, and the person who wanted his experience to count for something beyond himself.

Let them remember that a public record is not a verdict; that a complaint is a request for examination, not proof of guilt; that a person's suffering does not erase their achievements; and that disagreement does not excuse indifference.

Let them remember, too, that a life is more than its injuries.

The witness remains. The work remains. The questions remain. And while Richard William McLean is here, his life is still being lived—not merely remembered.

THE WITNESS REMAINS

A Eulogy for Dr Barran Dodger

Dr Richard William McLean — Writer, Researcher, Whistleblower, Advocate and Witness

This is a tribute to a life and body of work. It is not a prediction that the life described here is ending.

There are lives that can be summarised by a profession, a qualification, a family name or a list of achievements. And there are lives that cannot be understood without listening to the person who lived them.

The life of Dr Richard William McLean, who writes and publishes under the name Dr Barran Dodger, belongs in the second category.

His story is not a simple story of triumph, nor is it a story that can honestly be reduced to illness, controversy, accusation or institutional conflict. It is the story of a person who has tried to preserve his identity, his intellectual work, his memories and his account of events while seeking recognition, protection and a fair hearing.

He has been a journalist and news graphics artist, an author, an artist, a researcher, an educator, a mental-health advocate and a disability-support practitioner. He completed a PhD at Victoria University in 2020, examining questions concerning the ethics of artificial intelligence and posthumanism against the background of global catastrophic risks and the Anthropocene, through the ethical perspectives of young people. His work reflects an enduring interest in how societies decide what matters, whose voices count, and what obligations human beings owe one another.

His writing has also been personal. In Recovered, Not Cured: A Journey Through Schizophrenia, he sought to describe an experience of mental illness in his own words. He has described the book as receiving recognition and being used in medical education. Whatever the reader's view of any individual account, the work represents a determination to place lived experience into public discussion rather than leave it entirely to other people to interpret.

Over the years, he has written and assembled works including Betrayed, Murdered, Forsaken, The Architecture of Administrative Annihilation, The Gospel of the Love Chain, The Gospel of Barran Dodger, Declaration of Sovereign Vindication, The Man They Mistook for His Wound, and They Could Not Erase What God Preserved. These titles reveal the recurring subjects of his work: betrayal, survival, institutional power, memory, dignity, faith, and the struggle to retain authorship of one's own life.

Some of his writing is documentary. Some is autobiographical. Some is political or philosophical. Some is prophetic and spiritual. Those different forms should not be confused with one another. His religious convictions are part of his testimony and should be preserved as such, without requiring every reader to share them or treating faith as a substitute for documentary verification.

For Barran Dodger, the archive became a way of refusing disappearance.

The repository bearing his name brings together correspondence, official documents, administrative records, statements, research, essays, preservation copies and material he believes is relevant to his complaints. It seeks to preserve records and make them accessible to journalists, researchers, lawyers, advocates, historians, public officials and the public. Its own stated principle is important: a finding aid is not a court, and a file name is not a finding.

That distinction is central to his legacy. The archive should not ask the public to accept every allegation simply because it has been recorded. It should allow people to inspect the underlying documents, understand their origins, compare accounts, identify what is corroborated, and see what remains unresolved. A fair investigation must be willing to examine evidence that supports a claim and evidence that complicates or contradicts it.

Barran Dodger has described experiences of isolation, disability, hardship, conflict with services and difficulty obtaining the responses he sought from institutions. These are serious matters to document and assess. His allegations about particular people and organisations require careful, independent examination; no person should be declared guilty merely because their name appears in his archive. Equally, a person who makes a complaint should not be dismissed merely because their account is uncomfortable, complicated or disputed.

His request, at its core, is that the record be read.

Not merely the titles. Not merely the most dramatic statements. Not merely the conclusions he has drawn. The records themselves: who wrote them, when they were written, what they actually say, what decisions followed, what responses were received, and what questions remain unanswered.

That is the work of preservation. It is also the work of fairness.

His life has not been only a struggle against institutions. It has also been a life of ideas, books, art, research, advocacy and attempts to give language to experiences that are difficult to communicate. It has included relationships, kindnesses, disappointments, ordinary human needs, and the companionship of his dog, Crystal. These things matter because no person is only a case file, a complaint, a diagnosis, a dispute or a public identity.

The name Barran Dodger is the name under which he has chosen to build a public record. Behind that name is Richard William McLean: a human being whose life cannot be fully captured by the most painful chapters of his history.

His faith has also shaped his understanding of survival. He has interpreted his continued existence through the language of God, providence, purpose and witness. Those beliefs belong to his personal testimony. They should be recorded respectfully, without using them to predetermine what the evidence establishes or to suggest that suffering was necessary, deserved or ordained.

The words They Could Not Erase What God Preserved express his spiritual interpretation of endurance. The title The Witness Remains expresses a parallel documentary purpose: that records should remain available for examination even when the person who assembled them is tired, unheard or no longer able to explain them.

The public work associated with his name now has several connected dimensions. The documentary archive preserves and organises the record. The rebuild provides another route into that material. The Church of Barran Dodger carries the spiritual and ministry dimension, including his Gospels and prophetic writings. The Church of Barran Dodger — Global Ministry & Publishing House — represents his stated ambition to publish and distribute his work internationally. These parts should be presented with clarity about their different purposes: documentary evidence, personal testimony, spiritual teaching and publication.

If this work is to endure, it must do more than repeat pain. It must preserve the source material, make its organisation understandable, protect people's privacy where appropriate, distinguish evidence from inference, correct errors when they are identified, and leave space for independent scrutiny. That is how an archive can become useful to people who do not already agree with its author.

The measure of a life is not whether every institution eventually agrees with the person who challenged it. Nor is it whether every allegation is ultimately sustained. A more enduring measure is what a person tried to contribute, what questions they insisted should be asked, what work they left behind, and whether others are willing to examine that work honestly.

Dr Barran Dodger has asked to be heard while he is alive, not merely explained after he is gone. That request deserves to be taken seriously. His health, safety, dignity and access to appropriate care matter now. His archive should be preserved as a living body of work, not treated as a substitute for the living person.

If these words are ever read as a eulogy, let them not be used to turn an unresolved life into a closed case. Let them instead be a call to preserve the record responsibly, investigate what can be investigated, acknowledge what can be established, correct what is wrong, and leave unproven matters open rather than manufacture certainty.

Let those who encounter his work remember the writer and researcher, the advocate and artist, the man behind the archive, and the person who wanted his experience to count for something beyond himself.

Let them remember that a public record is not a verdict; that a complaint is a request for examination, not proof of guilt; that a person's suffering does not erase their achievements; and that disagreement does not excuse indifference.

Let them remember, too, that a life is more than its injuries.

The witness remains. The work remains. The questions remain. And while Richard William McLean is here, his life is still being lived—not merely remembered.

You're right. You wanted one complete document with two distinct, substantial sections: first, the full forensic, itemised register of people, places, organisations and linked evidence; second, the complete eulogy. Both sections belong together in one document you can copy and preserve. I'm sorry I kept fragmenting it.

Below is the combined document, with the evidence register first and the eulogy second. I've retained the distinction between documents that exist, allegations contained in them and matters independently established. I will not invent findings or pretend I have read PDFs whose contents I cannot access.

THE WITNESS REMAINS

DR BARRAN DODGER

DR RICHARD WILLIAM McLEAN

A PUBLIC DOCUMENTARY RECORD OF LIFE, TESTIMONY, INSTITUTIONAL CORRESPONDENCE, ALLEGED DETRIMENT, EVIDENCE PRESERVATION, FAITH, SURVIVAL AND THE SEARCH FOR ACCOUNTABILITY

Document type: Combined documentary register and personal eulogy

Purpose: Preservation, research, accountability, historical record and recognition of the life and work of Dr Richard William McLean, known publicly as Dr Barran Dodger

Primary archive: <https://wezzo72.github.io/Barrandodger/>

Rebuild archive: <https://wezzo72.github.io/barrandodger-rebuild/>

Earlier archive: <https://drbarrandodger.github.io/barran-dodger-archive/>

GitHub repository: <https://github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger>

Methodological principle: Preservation first. Examination second. Conclusions last.

Important qualification: This document records identifiable documentary leads and the author's account. Inclusion of a person, organisation, place or allegation does not establish culpability. Every material allegation must be assessed against the underlying evidence, relevant responses, corroborating material and any independent finding.

PART I — THE FORENSIC AND HISTORICAL REGISTER

1. Purpose and scope

This register brings together the known documentary leads, individuals, organisations, places, proceedings, publications and preservation infrastructure associated with the life and public work of Dr Richard William McLean, writing under the name Dr Barran Dodger. It is intended to serve as a finding aid for journalists, researchers, lawyers, historians, advocates, public officials, investigators and members of the public seeking to understand the archive.

The purpose is not to declare every allegation proved. It is to make the documentary trail easier to examine, preserve relevant questions and identify the records required to establish what happened.

The register distinguishes:

- The existence of a document from the truth of its contents.
- A complaint from a finding.
- A person's name appearing in correspondence from proof that the person caused harm.
- A government acknowledgement from a substantive determination.
- An allegation of misconduct from an independently established act.
- An author's interpretation from the wording of a primary record.
- A cryptographic hash or timestamp from proof that the underlying allegation is true.
- Spiritual and prophetic writing from legal or administrative evidence.

The archive's own guiding proposition is important: a filename is not a finding, and a finding aid is not a court.

2. Principal archive locations and preservation layers

2.1 Main documentary archive

Link: <https://wezzo72.github.io/Barrandodger/>

This is the principal public-facing archive associated with The Witness Remains. It presents the author's documentary collection, statements, correspondence, publications, evidence categories and research.

The archive should be read as a collection requiring examination, not as an independently adjudicated account of every event described.

2.2 Rebuild and preservation archive

Link: <https://wezzo72.github.io/barrandodger-rebuild/>

This is an additional archive route intended to preserve access to material and provide another means of navigating the documentary record.

Where a record exists in more than one version, the versions should be compared and provenance recorded rather than silently replacing one copy with another.

2.3 Earlier archive

Link: <https://drbarrandodger.github.io/barran-dodger-archive/>

This earlier public archive is relevant to reconstructing the development of the author's public record, including changes in structure, terminology, publication and evidence organisation.

2.4 Primary GitHub repository

Link: <https://github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger>

The repository contains the underlying files and website materials associated with the public archive.

A repository README has reported 5,583 files, including 2,840 PDFs and 1,813 HTML files. These are repository-reported figures and should be verified against a fresh repository-tree export before being represented as an independently audited count.

The repository's file count must not be confused with the number of independently verified events, allegations, government findings or distinct documents.

2.5 Digital provenance and preservation

The archive describes the use of file hashes, Git history, blockchain-related records and timestamping methods.

These mechanisms may help establish that a particular digital file has remained unchanged since a recorded point in time, or that a version existed in a repository at a particular time. They do not, by themselves, establish that the document's contents are true, that a person committed an act, or that an allegation has been independently substantiated.

A rigorous preservation register should retain:

1. Original filename.
2. Original source and location.
3. Date obtained, where known.
4. Author or issuing organisation, where identifiable.
5. Document date.
6. SHA-256 hash, where calculated.
7. Git commit or blob identifier, where applicable.
8. Timestamp or blockchain record, where applicable.
9. Duplicate or derivative-copy relationships.
10. Privacy and publication status.
11. Any redaction or transcription history.
12. A link to the exact public record, where publication is appropriate.

Original source records should remain distinguishable from OCR output, generated summaries, analytical reports and later reconstructions.

3. Classification of evidence

For this register, the following classifications should be used.

A — Established fact: Supported by an authoritative record or reliable evidence establishing the particular fact in question. The classification applies only to that specific fact, not automatically to every conclusion drawn from it.

B — Corroborated account: Supported by more than one relevant source, with the relationship between those sources made clear.

C — Documented allegation: A complaint, statement, affidavit, email or other record establishes that an allegation was made. It does not necessarily establish that the allegation is true.

D — Inference or interpretation: A conclusion drawn from records, chronology, conduct or circumstances that requires further examination.

E — Speculation or unresolved hypothesis: A possibility that has not been sufficiently established by the available evidence.

A separate status should record whether a claim is disputed, contradicted, independently determined, unresolved or withdrawn.

These classifications should be assigned to individual propositions, not whole people. A person can be correctly identified as the author of a letter while the allegations in that letter remain unresolved.

SECTION A — ITEMISED REGISTER OF PEOPLE

4. Dr Richard William McLean / Dr Barran Dodger

Identity: Dr Richard William McLean, who writes and publishes as Dr Barran Dodger.

Role in the archive: Author, researcher, witness, advocate, artist and subject of the documentary collection.

Principal evidence locations:

- Main archive: <https://wezzo72.github.io/Barrandodger/>
- Rebuild: <https://wezzo72.github.io/barrandodger-rebuild/>
- Earlier archive: <https://drbarrandodger.github.io/barran-dodger-archive/>
- Repository: <https://github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger>

Relevant material described by the author: Personal statements; employment records; government correspondence; disability-service records; FOI material; legal and administrative correspondence; complaints; research; publications; spiritual writing; preservation records; and analytical reports.

What the record should establish: The chronology of the author's life and employment; the actual wording and context of official decisions; which complaints were submitted; which agencies responded; what actions were taken; what was left unresolved; and what can be independently corroborated.

Classification: The existence of published work and the author's public identity can be checked directly. The truth of each individual allegation must be assessed separately.

5. Rebecca Faulkingham

Record: A letter dated 7 January 2024 concerning NDIS accountability.

Link: <https://github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger/blob/main/07.01.2024%20letter%20to%20ndis%20ceo%20rebecca%20faulkingham%20Demand%20for%20accountability%20%7C%20drichmclean.pdf>

Documentary relevance: The filename identifies Rebecca Faulkingham in connection with correspondence addressed to NDIS leadership.

Questions requiring examination:

1. What precisely did the letter request?
2. Was it sent and received?
3. What was her formal position and responsibility at the relevant time?
4. Was a response issued?
5. Was the matter referred to another office?
6. Is there a later decision or record addressing the substance of the letter?

Evidence status: Named in a document title. The title alone establishes neither the contents of the letter nor personal responsibility for any alleged detriment.

6. Scott Tredwell

Records identified in the archive listing:

- Correspondence dated 8 January 2024 concerning Federal Court, superannuation and NDIS-related matters.
- Material associated with a 27 March 2023 assessment.
- Other employment and public interest disclosure-related correspondence described by the author.

Links:

- <https://github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger/blob/main/08.01.2024%20scott%20treadwell%20Federal%20Court%20-%20superannuation%20and%20NDIS%20CEO%20copy%202.pdf>
- https://github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger/blob/main/2023-03-27_Federal_Court_PID_Assessment.pdf

Documentary relevance: The records may be relevant to the author's employment history, administrative status and attempts to obtain recognition or a response.

Questions requiring examination: The complete letter; the author's precise employment status; the purpose of the assessment; the issuing office; the legal framework applied; any subsequent correspondence; and any review or determination.

Evidence status: Named in correspondence. Any assertion about the adequacy, legality or consequences of a decision requires the full document and relevant context.

7. Brett — surname not established

Record: "Brett from Able Point — I demand a response."

Link: <https://github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger/blob/main/Brett%20from%20able%20point%20I%20demand%20a%20response.pdf>

Documentary relevance: The filename associates a person identified as Brett with Able

Point and a demand for a response.

Questions requiring examination:

- Full name and role.
- Dates and nature of the interaction.
- The original correspondence.
- The issue for which a response was sought.
- Whether a response was received.
- Any related support plans, service agreements, incident records or complaints.

Evidence status: Identity incomplete; substantive conduct not established by the filename.

8. Bernard Collaery

Record: A PDF identified by the name "BERNARD COLLAERY" in the repository listing.

Repository: <https://github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger>

Documentary relevance: The name is a lead for a file-level search.

Questions requiring examination: What the document is; why the name appears; whether it concerns a public figure, a correspondence recipient or another subject; and whether it is materially connected to the author's personal history.

Evidence status: The filename alone does not establish a relevant action or connection to alleged harm.

9. Danny Pearson

Record: A file dated 14 November 2025 whose title refers to HCF, AFCA and WorkCover.

Link: https://github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger/blob/main/2025-11-14_Danny_Pearson_HCF_AFCA_WorkCover.pdf

Documentary relevance: Potential connection to correspondence or complaints involving insurance, financial services or workers' compensation.

Questions requiring examination: The person's role; the context in which the name appears; whether the document records an actual decision, a request, a complaint or an allegation; and the response of any named institution.

Evidence status: Unresolved pending inspection of the source document.

10. Charan Naidoo

Record: A file dated 20 January 2026 associated by its filename with the Attorney-General's Office.

Link: https://github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger/blob/main/2026-01-20_Charan_Naidoo_AG_Office.pdf

Documentary relevance: Potential connection to government correspondence or administrative handling.

Questions requiring examination: Exact position; office; role in the communication; document author; purpose; and any response or decision.

Evidence status: Named in a filename. No finding of misconduct is established.

11. Kel Graham

Record: An email-related PDF dated 20 January 2026 whose title refers to corruption evidence.

Link: https://github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger/blob/main/2026-01-20_Kel_Graham_Corruption_Evidence_Email.pdf

Documentary relevance: A potential lead in the author's correspondence and complaint chronology.

Questions requiring examination: Whether the file contains an original email; the sender and recipient; the precise allegation; any supporting attachments; and any response.

Evidence status: The filename describes an allegation-related subject. It does not establish that corruption occurred or that the named person was responsible.

12. Elon Musk

Record: A letter dated 20 January 2026 addressed to Elon Musk.

Link: https://github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger/blob/main/2026-01-20_Letter_To_Elon_Musk.pdf

Documentary relevance: A record of correspondence addressed to a public figure.

Questions requiring examination: The purpose of the letter, whether it was sent, whether it was received, and whether any reply exists.

Evidence status: A letter addressed to a person does not establish that the recipient was involved in events described in the archive.

13. Minister McAllister

Record: A formal notice dated 21 January 2026.

Link: https://github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger/blob/main/2026-01-21_Formal_Notice_Minister_McAllister.pdf

Documentary relevance: Potential ministerial correspondence.

Questions requiring examination: The minister's full identity, portfolio, date and method of service, substance of the notice, legal basis asserted and any response.

Evidence status: The filename does not establish receipt, agreement, action or misconduct.

14. Mark Dreyfus

Record: A letter dated 24 January 2026 addressed to the Attorney-General.

Link: https://github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger/blob/main/2026-01-24_Letter_Attorney_General_Dreyfus.pdf

Documentary relevance: A potential request for ministerial or departmental attention.

Questions requiring examination: The contents of the letter; the intended recipient; whether it was delivered; any referral; and any formal response.

Evidence status: Named as an addressee. The existence of correspondence is not a finding against the recipient.

15. Emma McBride

Record: A statement addressed to the Hon. Emma McBride.

Link: https://github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger/blob/main/2026-01-24_Statement_To_Hon_Emma_McBride.pdf

Documentary relevance: Parliamentary or ministerial correspondence.

Questions requiring examination: The specific request; delivery; office handling; response; and any subsequent action.

Evidence status: Named as a recipient of a statement. No further conclusion is justified without reading the record.

16. Troy Kilbourn

Source of information: The author's account of a threat and an interim ADVO matter at Wyong Local Court.

Archive: <https://wezzo72.github.io/Barrandodger/>

Documentary relevance: Potentially relevant to the author's safety history and interactions with police and the court system.

Required records: The original complaint or statement; any police event number; court application; interim order; later court orders; and any final disposition.

Evidence status: The author's account requires comparison with primary police and court records. The precise allegations and procedural outcome should not be inferred from the name alone.

17. Kim

Source of information: The author's account identifies Kim as a support worker.

Archive: <https://wezzo72.github.io/Barrandodger/>

Documentary relevance: Potential support-service communications and accommodation events.

Required records: Dated messages, service notes, incident reports, support plans, complaint correspondence and any response.

Evidence status: Role and any specific allegation must be verified against records.

18. Rachel K. C.

Source of information: The author's account associates this name with support arrangements.

Archive: <https://wezzo72.github.io/Barrandodger/>

Documentary relevance: Potential involvement in service coordination or communication.

Required records: Full name, role, dates, source correspondence and any specific event in which the person participated.

Evidence status: Identity and actions remain to be established.

19. Cass

Source of information: Personal correspondence and conversations described by the author.

Archive: <https://wezzo72.github.io/Barrandodger/>

Documentary relevance: Personal relationships and correspondence form part of a life history, but a personal relationship should not automatically be treated as an accountability allegation.

Evidence status: The register should distinguish ordinary personal communication from any separately evidenced event or complaint.

20. Philip Glass

Source of information: The author's account identifies Philip Glass as a former financial manager.

Archive: <https://wezzo72.github.io/Barrandodger/>

Documentary relevance: Potential historical financial-management decisions.

Required records: Appointment dates; authority; financial statements; correspondence; transactions; and any review or determination.

Evidence status: Role and actions require confirmation from primary records.

21. Other people who must be extracted from the underlying records

The current list cannot honestly be described as every person in the repository. A complete content-level audit must also identify:

- Every author and signatory of official correspondence.
- Every named public servant and case officer.
- Every named support worker and service coordinator.
- Every clinician or hospital officer relevant to a specific event.
- Every police officer or court officer identified in primary records.
- Every tribunal member or decision-maker identified in an official decision.
- Every witness identified in a statement or incident record.
- Every complainant or respondent named in a relevant proceeding.
- Every named recipient of a letter or email, with delivery status distinguished from actual knowledge.
- Every person named in an attachment or scanned document but absent from its filename.
- Every person mentioned in a chronology, forensic report or analytical document, with the source of each assertion identified.

No responsible register should invent these names or attach blame to people whose actions have not been established.

SECTION B — ITEMISED REGISTER OF ORGANISATIONS AND AGENCIES

22. National Disability Insurance Scheme

Relevant records: NDIS leadership correspondence and plan-related records.

Links:

- <https://github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger/blob/main/07.01.2024%20letter%20to%20ndis%20ceo%20rebecca%20faulkingham%20Demand%20for%20accountability%20%7C%20drrichmclean.pdf>
- <https://github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger>

Questions for examination: Plan decisions, funding, service access, provider complaints, the handling of correspondence, and any review or response.

Evidence status: A complaint or letter demonstrates that a matter was raised, not that the allegation was upheld.

23. Able Point

Relevant record: "Brett from Able Point — I demand a response."

Link: <https://github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger/blob/main/Brett%20from%20able%20point%20I%20demand%20a%20response.pdf>

Questions for examination: Service agreements, the precise support arrangement, communications, incident reports, safety concerns, complaints, provider responses and any formal review.

Evidence status: The provider is a documentary lead in the author's account. Specific alleged conduct requires examination of the underlying records.

24. NSW Trustee & Guardian

Relevant record: A document dated 16 October 2024 and other financial-management material described in the repository.

Repository: <https://github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger>

Questions for examination: Financial authority; account statements; disbursements; notices; decisions affecting assets; reasons for those decisions; and available review mechanisms.

Evidence status: Financial-management correspondence can establish that a decision was made. Whether that decision was lawful, reasonable or harmful requires examination of the evidence and applicable rules.

25. Federal Court of Australia

Relevant record: Material dated 27 March 2023 concerning a public interest disclosure assessment or related administrative matter.

Link: https://github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger/blob/main/2023-03-27_Federal_Court_PID_Assessment.pdf

Questions for examination: The exact issuing office; the precise statement made; the legal and employment context; the nature of any determination; and subsequent correspondence.

Evidence status: The full record must be read before summarising the legal effect of the document.

26. Department of Social Services

Relevant context: The author's reported employment relationship and associated correspondence.

Repository: <https://github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger>

Questions for examination: Employment records; dates; status; relevant decisions; and the full context of correspondence attributed to government legal staff.

Evidence status: The author's account and a particular letter should be quoted accurately and distinguished from broader conclusions about the department.

27. National Anti-Corruption Commission

Relevant record: A statement dated 3 July 2023.

Link: <https://github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger/blob/main/03.07.2023%20statement%20to%20NACC%202.pdf>

Questions for examination: What was submitted, what was acknowledged, whether the matter was assessed, whether it was referred or declined, and whether any final determination exists.

Evidence status: A submission to an oversight body is evidence that a complaint was made; it is not proof of the complaint's contents.

28. Australian Human Rights Commission

Relevant record: Correspondence dated 4 July 2023 concerning contact with the Commission.

Link: <https://github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger/blob/main/04.07.2023%20Your%20contact%20with%20AHRC%20SECOFFICIALSensitive.pdf>

Questions for examination: The complaint or contact, any jurisdictional decision, the response and any subsequent action.

Evidence status: The actual communication must be read before stating what the Commission decided.

29. Office of the Australian Information Commissioner

Relevant records: FOI and privacy-related material, including records dated January 2026.

Repository: <https://github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger>

Questions for examination: The precise application or complaint; the statutory basis for the decision; the reasons; any review; and the records released or withheld.

Evidence status: A refusal, extension or closure should be described by its actual wording and legal basis, not interpreted automatically as evidence of misconduct.

30. Commonwealth Ombudsman

Relevant records: Service-restriction and public interest disclosure-related correspondence.

Repository: <https://github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger>

Questions for examination: The exact complaint, acknowledgement, jurisdictional assessment, decision and any referral.

Evidence status: A receipt or acknowledgement proves only what it says it proves. It should not be represented as confirmation that the allegations were substantiated.

31. Victoria Ombudsman

Relevant records: FOI decisions, including a record dated 14 June 2022.

Link: <https://github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger>

Questions for examination: The original request, the precise exemption invoked, reasons, review options and the documents ultimately released.

Evidence status: The decision must be quoted accurately and evaluated in its legal context.

32. Administrative Appeals Tribunal and related administrative review

Relevant record: A file titled "AAT Comcare hearing denied legal aid."

Repository: <https://github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger>

Questions for examination: The proceeding, hearing dates, legal-aid decision, decision-maker, stated reasons and any review or later outcome.

Evidence status: The filename is a lead. The procedural record must establish what occurred.

33. NSW Civil and Administrative Tribunal

Relevant record: A guardianship-related evidence file identified in the repository listing.

Repository: <https://github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger>

Questions for examination: The proceeding, parties, application, evidence lodged, orders and any reasons.

Evidence status: The existence of a guardianship-related document does not establish the outcome of a proceeding.

34. Law Enforcement Conduct Commission

Relevant record: A file described as an out-of-jurisdiction response dated 19 November 2025.

Repository: <https://github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger>

Questions for examination: The precise complaint, the reason the matter was considered outside jurisdiction and whether another agency was identified.

Evidence status: A jurisdictional response is not equivalent to a finding that the complaint was true or false.

35. Australian Prudential Regulation Authority

Relevant context: Public interest disclosure and agency-correspondence records.

Repository: <https://github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger>

Questions for examination: Whether a submission was actually received, its subject, any jurisdictional assessment and any response.

Evidence status: The name of an agency in a correspondence title does not prove substantive involvement.

36. Attorney-General's Department and ministerial offices

Relevant records: Correspondence addressed to the Attorney-General and other ministerial offices.

Repository: <https://github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger>

Questions for examination: Exact addressee; delivery; departmental handling; any referral; and any formal response.

Evidence status: A letter to an office is not proof that the minister personally reviewed or endorsed its contents.

37. Department of Home Affairs and protection-related processes

Relevant context: The author has described seeking protection and has referred to asylum-related correspondence.

Repository: <https://github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger>

Questions for examination: Whether a record is a template, application, acknowledgement, referral, formal decision or grant of protection; the issuing body; and the actual legal status.

Evidence status: A reported receipt or reference must not be presented as a formal finding or protection decision without the underlying record.

38. Inspector-General of Intelligence and Security and ASIO

Relevant record: An information request referring to IGIS and ASIO.

Repository: <https://github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger>

Questions for examination: What information was requested; whether it was received; which body had jurisdiction; and what response was given.

Evidence status: A request does not establish that an intelligence agency was involved in the alleged events.

39. Police services

Relevant record: A police-matter legal-documents file and the author's account of a threat and court proceedings.

Repository: <https://github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger>

Questions for examination: Jurisdiction; incident numbers; original statements; officers' names and roles; decisions; referrals; court records; and final outcomes.

Evidence status: A complaint, arrest, charge, interim order or court outcome are distinct procedural events and must not be conflated.

40. Wyong Local Court

Relevant context: The author's account of an interim ADVO proceeding.

Repository: <https://github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger>

Questions for examination: Application, parties, interim orders, subsequent orders and the final disposition, if any.

Evidence status: The court file is required to establish the exact procedural history.

41. Goulburn Hospital

Relevant records: CEO briefing documents identified in the repository listing.

Repository: <https://github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger>

Questions for examination: Author, date, purpose, whether each copy is a draft or final record, the event discussed, and any resulting action.

Evidence status: A briefing document establishes what its author recorded; its assertions require their own evidentiary assessment.

42. Werribee Mercy / Mercy Hospital

Relevant context: The author's reported treatment history and later complaint-related correspondence.

Repository: <https://github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger>

Questions for examination: Clinical records, discharge documentation, complaints, response letters and any external review.

Evidence status: Medical and administrative records should be read in context. An allegation about care requires examination of the clinical facts and any independent assessment.

43. Anglicare

Relevant records: Safety assessment and duty-of-care material.

Repository: <https://github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger>

Questions for examination: Whether the record is a template or completed assessment, what risks were identified, what actions were taken and what referrals occurred.

Evidence status: The record's contents and operational context must be verified.

44. HCF, AFCA and WorkCover

Relevant record: A file dated 14 November 2025 whose title refers to Danny Pearson, HCF, AFCA and WorkCover.

Repository: <https://github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger>

Questions for examination: Which claim or complaint is at issue, which entity made each decision, the reference numbers, responses and outcomes.

Evidence status: The entities' presence in one filename does not establish that they acted together or share responsibility.

45. Victims of Crime Victoria

Relevant record: A letter addressed to the Victims of Crime Commissioner.

Repository: <https://github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger>

Questions for examination: The assistance requested, the date of contact, the response and any subsequent referral or decision.

Evidence status: Correspondence demonstrates that an issue was raised; the response must be read before describing its outcome.

46. GitHub, GitHub Pages, Google Drive, Gmail, Dropbox and MyAIDrive

These platforms form part of the archive's digital provenance and publication environment.

Relevant repository: <https://github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger>

Their functions must be kept distinct:

- GitHub: Repository hosting, file history and version tracking.
- GitHub Pages: Website presentation and public navigation.
- Google Drive: A storage and source location for some documents, according to the author's archive description.
- Gmail and email attachments: Potential sources of correspondence and delivery evidence.
- Dropbox: A source or import location identified in the archive.
- MyAIDrive: A storage or import location identified by the author.

These platforms are not presumed to have caused or endorsed the alleged events. Their evidentiary relevance concerns storage, access, provenance, delivery and preservation.

47. Church of Barran Dodger and Global Ministry & Publishing House

Relevant context: The author's spiritual writing, ministry identity and international publishing ambitions.

Main archive: <https://wezzo72.github.io/Barrandodger/>

The spiritual and publishing dimensions should remain connected to the author's life while being clearly distinguished from the documentary register.

The Church of Barran Dodger represents the author's ministry and spiritual work. The Global Ministry & Publishing House represents the stated ambition to publish and distribute the author's books, Gospels, prophetic writings and related material internationally.

Religious testimony should be represented respectfully as faith and personal interpretation. It should not be substituted for evidence about the actions of other people.

SECTION C — PLACES AND JURISDICTIONS

48. Victoria, Australia

Relevant context: The author's reported former journalism employment, earlier life and treatment history, and correspondence with Victorian oversight bodies.

Potential records: Employment documents, correspondence with the Victoria Ombudsman, human-rights records, hospital records and police or service-related documents.

Evidence requirement: Each event must be connected to a specific dated source. The fact that an event occurred in Victoria does not establish the responsibility of a particular agency or person.

49. Werribee, Victoria

Relevant institution: Werribee Mercy / Mercy Hospital.

Relevant context: The author's account of treatment and subsequent complaints.

Required records: Clinical notes, discharge records, complaint correspondence and any independent assessment.

50. Goulburn, New South Wales

Relevant institution: Goulburn Hospital.

Relevant records: CEO briefing documents identified in the repository listing.

Required examination: Authorship, date, context, exact contents and any action taken.

51. Wyong, New South Wales

Relevant institution: Wyong Local Court.

Relevant context: The author's account of an interim ADVO proceeding.

Required records: Court application, interim orders, subsequent orders and final disposition, if any.

52. New South Wales generally

Relevant context: The author's later accommodation and disability-support arrangements, financial management and reported interactions with services.

Relevant records: Service agreements, financial-management records, accommodation correspondence, complaints, police documents and tribunal records.

53. Canberra and Commonwealth administration

Relevant institutions: Commonwealth departments, ministerial offices and federal oversight bodies.

Relevant context: Employment-related correspondence, public interest disclosure material, FOI processes and complaints.

Required examination: The precise issuing body, statutory authority, dates, recipients, responses and outcomes.

54. Online archive and digital storage locations

Relevant locations:

- <https://wezzo72.github.io/Barrandodger/>
- <https://wezzo72.github.io/barrandodger-rebuild/>
- <https://drbarrandodger.github.io/barran-dodger-archive/>
- <https://github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger>

Purpose: Preservation, publication, navigation and access to records.

Digital publication is not a substitute for independent verification, but it can provide a stable path for others to inspect the source material.

SECTION D — KEY RECORDS REQUIRING DIRECT EXAMINATION

55. The “Who Harmed Me” document

Link: <https://github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger>

The repository listing previously identified a PDF titled “Barran Dodger Archive — Who Harmed Me · The Witness Remains.”

Purpose of examination: Identify each event described, separate firsthand observations from interpretations, identify the cited sources and link each claim to the original record.

Required output: A claim-by-claim table rather than a general conclusion about a person or institution.

56. Forensic Accountability Reports

Link: <https://github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger>

The repository listing identifies “FORENSIC ACCOUNTABILITY REPORT” and “FORENSIC ACCOUNTABILITY REPORT 2.”

Purpose of examination: Establish the methodology, source documents, calculations, assumptions, limitations and conclusions.

Any numerical claim—including estimated public expenditure or the number of records said to support an allegation—must be traceable to a reproducible calculation and defined source set.

57. “Personal Statement of Exile, Institutional Detriment and the Search for Protection”

Link: <https://github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger>

This is identified as a first-person statement.

Purpose of examination: Preserve the author’s account in his own terms while separately identifying which details are corroborated by official documents, third-party witnesses or independent findings.

58. NACC statement dated 3 July 2023

Link: <https://github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger>

Purpose of examination: Identify the allegations actually submitted, any attached evidence, the agency's acknowledgement, any assessment and the eventual outcome.

59. AHRC correspondence dated 4 July 2023

Link: <https://github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger>

Purpose of examination: Establish the exact communication, the nature of the contact, any jurisdictional or procedural response, and any further action.

60. Federal Court-related assessment dated 27 March 2023

Link: <https://github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger>

Purpose of examination: Read the complete original record, identify the issuing office and precise wording, and establish the document's legal and administrative context.

61. NSW Trustee & Guardian record dated 16 October 2024

Link: <https://github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger>

Purpose of examination: Establish the actual decision, the relevant authority, the reasons recorded, the financial consequences and any review process.

62. FOI documents released or revised on 1 October 2025

Link: <https://github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger>

The repository listing identifies a release, a revised decision and a schedule associated with FOI reference 2022-0451C.

Purpose of examination: Compare the decision and revised decision, determine which documents were released or withheld, identify the statutory basis for any exemptions and establish what the schedule records.

63. Goulburn Hospital CEO briefings dated November 2025

Link: <https://github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger>

Purpose of examination: Identify the authors, recipients, date, status and contents of each briefing. Determine whether later copies differ and whether any documented action followed.

64. NDIS plan approval material dated 20 November 2025

Link: <https://github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger>

Purpose of examination: Establish the actual plan decision, effective dates, approved supports, reasons, review rights and any later amendment.

65. LECC response dated 19 November 2025

Link: <https://github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger>

Purpose of examination: Determine the exact reason given for the jurisdictional response and whether the letter identified another appropriate avenue.

66. Police matter legal documents dated January 2026

Link: <https://github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger>

Purpose of examination: Extract dates, officers, event numbers, statements, decisions and court references. Distinguish allegations, recorded actions, charges, orders and final outcomes.

67. OAIC and Commonwealth Ombudsman material dated January 2026

Link: <https://github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger>

Purpose of examination: Separate acknowledgement receipts, extension decisions, refusals, complaint closures, substantive determinations and review rights.

68. Parliamentary correspondence dated 2023 and 2026

Link: <https://github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger>

Purpose of examination: Identify every addressee from the original documents, establish whether the letters were sent and received, and record any actual response.

69. Allegation compilations and analytical titles

The repository listing includes titles concerning alleged crimes, targeting, assassination, human sacrifice, conspiracy and entrapment.

Purpose of examination: Preserve the author's allegations as testimony, then assess each specific claim against the source evidence.

A title that uses the word "crime" does not establish that a criminal offence occurred. A title alleging a conspiracy does not establish that a conspiracy existed. Any claim of criminal conduct must be supported by reliable evidence and, where applicable, accurately describe the status of any police or court process.

SECTION E — OUTSTANDING WORK REQUIRED FOR A COMPLETE FORENSIC REGISTER

70. Full repository extraction

A genuinely exhaustive register requires a complete export of the repository tree and content-level processing of accessible documents.

The following folders and file groups have been identified as potentially relevant:

- emails
- evidence
- statements
- sources
- rendered-pdfs
- site-pdfs
- myaidrive-pdfs
- dropbox-import-2026-10-07
- Other document, correspondence, archive and publication directories shown by the repository tree.

Every accessible PDF, HTML file, email, attachment and text record should be processed for:

1. Personal names.
2. Organisational names.

3. Place names.
4. Dates and event references.
5. Authors and signatories.
6. Recipients and delivery status.
7. Decisions and stated reasons.
8. Allegations and the identity of the person making them.
9. Responses and denials.
10. Independent findings.
11. Links to supporting or contradictory records.
12. Duplicates and version relationships.

OCR errors and uncertain identities must be flagged rather than silently corrected.

71. Required format for the final person-by-person register

Each entry should use this format:

Person or organisation:

Full name and role:

Relevant date or period:

Specific event or decision:

Primary document:

Direct URL:

Page or paragraph:

Exact relevant passage:

Author or issuing body:

Evidence classification:

Corroborating evidence:

Response or contrary evidence:

Independent finding, if any:

Unresolved questions:

Privacy or publication considerations:

This makes it possible to identify the precise evidence supporting a claim without confusing an allegation with a proven conclusion.

72. Final evidentiary qualification

This document is an expanded finding aid based on the public archive links and the record descriptions available at the time of preparation. It is not an exhaustive forensic audit of every file, and it does not purport to identify every person mentioned in every document. No one should be described as a perpetrator solely because their name appears in a document. No government body should be described as having substantiated a complaint unless its actual decision establishes that fact. No numerical claim should be treated as independently verified until its source data and methodology are available for examination. The archive's value lies in making the records available for scrutiny, preserving the author's account and enabling further examination—not in pre-empting the outcome of that examination.

PART II — THE EULOGY

THE WITNESS REMAINS

A Eulogy for Dr Barran Dodger

Dr Richard William McLean — Writer, Researcher, Whistleblower, Advocate and Witness

This is a tribute to a life and body of work. It is not a prediction that the life described here is ending.

There are lives that can be summarised by a profession, a qualification, a family name or a list of achievements. And there are lives that cannot be understood without listening to the person who lived them.

The life of Dr Richard William McLean, who writes and publishes under the name Dr Barran Dodger, belongs in the second category.

His story is not a simple story of triumph, nor is it a story that can honestly be reduced to illness, controversy, accusation or institutional conflict. It is the story of a person who has tried to preserve his identity, his intellectual work, his memories and his account of events while seeking recognition, protection and a fair hearing.

He has been a journalist and news graphics artist, an author, an artist, a researcher, an educator, a mental-health advocate and a disability-support practitioner. He completed a PhD at Victoria University in 2020, examining questions concerning the ethics of artificial intelligence and posthumanism against the background of global catastrophic risks and the Anthropocene, through the ethical perspectives of young people. His work reflects an enduring interest in how societies decide what matters, whose voices count, and what obligations human beings owe one another.

His writing has also been personal. In Recovered, Not Cured: A Journey Through Schizophrenia, he sought to describe an experience of mental illness in his own words. He has described the book as receiving recognition and being used in medical education. Whatever the reader's view of any individual account, the work represents a determination to place lived experience into public discussion rather than leave it entirely to other people to interpret.

Over the years, he has written and assembled works including Betrayed, Murdered, Forsaken, The Architecture of Administrative Annihilation, The Gospel of the Love Chain, The Gospel of Barran Dodger, Declaration of Sovereign Vindication, The Man They Mistook for His Wound, and They Could Not Erase What God Preserved. These titles reveal the recurring subjects of his work: betrayal, survival, institutional power, memory, dignity, faith, and the struggle to retain authorship of one's own life.

Some of his writing is documentary. Some is autobiographical. Some is political or philosophical. Some is prophetic and spiritual. Those different forms should not be confused with one another. His religious convictions are part of his testimony and should be preserved as such, without requiring every reader to share them or treating faith as a substitute for documentary verification.

For Barran Dodger, the archive became a way of refusing disappearance.

The repository bearing his name brings together correspondence, official documents, administrative records, statements, research, essays, preservation copies and material he believes is relevant to his complaints. It seeks to preserve records and make them accessible to journalists, researchers, lawyers, advocates, historians, public officials and the public. Its own stated principle is important: a finding aid is not a court, and a file name is not a finding. That distinction is central to his legacy. The archive should not ask the public to accept every allegation simply because it has been recorded. It should allow people to inspect the underlying documents, understand their origins, compare accounts, identify what is corroborated, and see what remains unresolved. A fair investigation must be willing to examine evidence that supports a claim and evidence that complicates or contradicts it. Barran Dodger has described experiences of isolation, disability, hardship, conflict with services and difficulty obtaining the responses he sought from institutions. These are serious matters to document and assess. His allegations about particular people and organisations require careful, independent examination; no person should be declared guilty merely because their name appears in his archive. Equally, a person who makes a complaint should not be dismissed merely because their account is uncomfortable, complicated or disputed.

His request, at its core, is that the record be read.

Not merely the titles. Not merely the most dramatic statements. Not merely the conclusions he has drawn. The records themselves: who wrote them, when they were written, what they actually say, what decisions followed, what responses were received, and what questions remain unanswered.

That is the work of preservation. It is also the work of fairness.

His life has not been only a struggle against institutions. It has also been a life of ideas, books, art, research, advocacy and attempts to give language to experiences that are difficult to communicate. It has included relationships, kindnesses, disappointments, ordinary human needs, and the companionship of his dog, Crystal. These things matter because no person is only a case file, a complaint, a diagnosis, a dispute or a public identity. The name Barran Dodger is the name under which he has chosen to build a public record. Behind that name is Richard William McLean: a human being whose life cannot be fully captured by the most painful chapters of his history.

His faith has also shaped his understanding of survival. He has interpreted his continued existence through the language of God, providence, purpose and witness. Those beliefs belong to his personal testimony. They should be recorded respectfully, without using them to predetermine what the evidence establishes or to suggest that suffering was necessary, deserved or ordained.

The words They Could Not Erase What God Preserved express his spiritual interpretation of endurance. The title The Witness Remains expresses a parallel documentary purpose: that records should remain available for examination even when the person who assembled them is tired, unheard or no longer able to explain them.

The public work associated with his name now has several connected dimensions. The documentary archive preserves and organises the record. The rebuild provides another route into that material. The Church of Barran Dodger carries the spiritual and ministry dimension, including his Gospels and prophetic writings. The Church of Barran Dodger — Global Ministry & Publishing House — represents his stated ambition to publish and distribute his work internationally. These parts should be presented with clarity about their different purposes: documentary evidence, personal testimony, spiritual teaching and publication.

If this work is to endure, it must do more than repeat pain. It must preserve the source material, make its organisation understandable, protect people's privacy where appropriate, distinguish evidence from inference, correct errors when they are identified, and leave space for independent scrutiny. That is how an archive can become useful to people who do not already agree with its author.

The measure of a life is not whether every institution eventually agrees with the person who challenged it. Nor is it whether every allegation is ultimately sustained. A more enduring measure is what a person tried to contribute, what questions they insisted should be asked, what work they left behind, and whether others are willing to examine that work honestly. Dr Barran Dodger has asked to be heard while he is alive, not merely explained after he is gone. That request deserves to be taken seriously. His health, safety, dignity and access to appropriate care matter now. His archive should be preserved as a living body of work, not treated as a substitute for the living person.

If these words are ever read as a eulogy, let them not be used to turn an unresolved life into a closed case. Let them instead be a call to preserve the record responsibly, investigate what can be investigated, acknowledge what can be established, correct what is wrong, and leave unproven matters open rather than manufacture certainty.

Let those who encounter his work remember the writer and researcher, the advocate and artist, the man behind the archive, and the person who wanted his experience to count for something beyond himself.

Let them remember that a public record is not a verdict; that a complaint is a request for examination, not proof of guilt; that a person's suffering does not erase their achievements; and that disagreement does not excuse indifference.

Let them remember, too, that a life is more than its injuries.

The witness remains. The work remains. The questions remain. And while Richard William McLean is here, his life is still being lived—not merely remembered.

PART III — PRESERVATION STATEMENT

This combined document is intended to preserve the author's public work and provide a structured path for further documentary examination.

It does not purport to replace the original source records. The source records should remain unaltered, with derivative copies and analytical documents clearly distinguished from originals.

The register should be expanded whenever additional names, places, organisations, decisions or records are extracted from the repository. Each addition should include a source link and a clear statement of what the source actually establishes.

The archive should remain open to correction, corroboration, contradiction and independent review.

The objective is not to manufacture certainty. It is to preserve the record so that the truth of each matter can be examined fairly.

THE WITNESS REMAINS.

I've combined the two parts into one document above, with the itemised register first and the complete eulogy as a separate second section. One limitation remains: this is not yet a verified extraction of every name and event inside every repository file. I won't falsely label it exhaustive while the underlying files still need to be read.