4 NOVEMBER 2026 · MASTER EDITION · FINDING AID · NOT A COURT · NOT A VERDICT

I exist. That is a problem for the government.

The Witness Remains. A comprehensive independent examination, in the form the author demanded, of thirty-five years of institutional conduct, political exile, whistleblower testimony, alleged targeting, administrative and financial entrapment, human rights, psychiatric governance, media representation, fiduciary responsibility and the documentary evidence. Subject: Dr Richard William McLean. Public identity: Barran Dodger / Barran Resonance Dodger. Period: 1990 to 4 November 2026. Primary jurisdiction: Australia. International dimension: United Nations human-rights mechanisms and the treaties Australia has ratified.

I exist. That is a problem for the government, and also an existential risk immediately exposing its corruption. That sentence is testimony and prophetic declaration. It is not a finding that a particular officer committed an offence.

The master PDF of this edition is i-exist-master.pdf. The formal demand of 1 November 2026 stands under its own name at The Great Reckoning — the inevitability of justice, and it is annexed to the PDF. The live appeal remains this SOS, https://barran-dodgers-sos.grok.me. The documentary repository, which is not the same thing as this website, is github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger.

1. Executive findings

These findings are classifications, not a verdict. They use the scale the command required. A is an authenticated documentary fact whose provenance has been adequately established. B is a fact supported by independent sources. C is a recorded allegation, meaning a complaint or message shows that the allegation was made. D is the author's testimony without independent corroboration in this edition. E is a reasonable inference from identified evidence. F is disputed. G is unverified. H is an outstanding question. Nothing in C, D, E, F, G or H is promoted to A by being repeated.

What is independently established in this edition, and only this much. A public website exists at the SOS address above and states an urgent request for safety, medicine, bank access and transport, and gives the address 55 Archbold Road, Long Jetty, NSW, and the telephone 0431 300 940. A GitHub repository exists at the address above in the name wezzo72/Barrandodger. Further public pages exist at the URLs listed in the source register below. Australia is a party to the ICCPR, the ICESCR, the CRPD and the Convention Against Torture; the Attorney-General's Department publishes that system at this official page. The NDIS Act 2013, the Disability Discrimination Act 1992, the Privacy Act 1988, the Public Interest Disclosure Act 2013, the Australian Human Rights Commission Act 1986, the Mental Health Act 2007 (NSW), the Guardianship Act 1987 (NSW), the NSW Trustee and Guardian Act 2009 and the Civil Liability Act 2002 (NSW) are real statutes at the links in the legal library. The NDIS Code of Conduct is a real instrument of the NDIS Commission. Specific archive PDFs are published at stable-looking GitHub Pages paths that this edition links by their published URLs, including an NDIS plan approval dated in the filename 20 November 2025, an Anglicare safety assessment dated in the filename 1 December 2025, an accommodation request dated in the filename 20 January 2026, a Federal Court PID assessment dated in the filename 27 March 2023, and a non-allocation notification dated in the filename 18 June 2023. A filename date is evidence of what the publisher called the file. It becomes proof of the document's internal date only when the file is opened. This edition links them. It does not pretend to have re-certified every page of every PDF.

What is the author's testimony, kept as testimony. He says he has survived more than thirty-five years of institutional encounters; that he is a journalist, author and PhD researcher whose thesis at Victoria University in 2020 was A Splice of My Life, and whose book Recovered, Not Cured: A Journey Through Schizophrenia is part of his public work; that he worked at The Age and that the employment ended after publicity involving the Herald Sun; that he advocated inside Parliament House on mental health before the NDIS; that he was forced from Victoria into what he calls political exile; that he has been homeless and has lived in a vehicle with his dog; that he survived an event he describes as nearly fatal, with heart failure, revival, hypoxia, and a cognitive injury, including events he places at Werribee Mercy in February 2021; that a Victorian Ombudsman letter of 5 October 2021 bears reference C/21/14020; that he has been hospitalised under mental-health law sixteen times in about five years, for not having a home, and is still denied the medication and humanity he needs; that he is not suicidal and is protesting because he wants to live; that conditions around him have been arranged, in his view, to solicit suicide so that police and mental-health services would incarcerate him; that there has been no arrest, no charge and no legal process establishing sexual allegations he says were used to destroy him, so that he has suffered as if guilty; that this is extra-judicial punishment, libel, slander and character assassination; that financial control by the NSW Trustee and Guardian and by decisions he attributes to Phillip Glass blocked CommBank app, NetBank and telephone banking; that Able Point workers left him without food, money or a phone; that Sukhi Tear of Diversitas in Western Australia is his support coordinator and has not, in his account, answered a cease-and-desist or the evidence of Ben's messages; that Ben's messages describe a close call, a fabricated report, an NDA and fear; that he alleges an attempted assassination and a cover-up involving public power, and names Bill Shorten's ministerial responsibility, Houd Meraby, Tony Ridley and Iasonidis in that account; that legal aid was denied in a way he calls absurd; that workers' compensation and insurance were not given where an ordinary worker would expect them; that no professional has given a dignified response to the published website; that God preserved his life; and that his existence, with the record, is a problem for a government that has not answered it.

What remains unverified in this edition. The truth of the assassination allegation. The existence and terms of any NDA. The contents of any police confirmation said to have been given to Ben. The lawfulness of any financial-management order. The reasons for any legal-aid refusal. Whether any workers' compensation or insurance claim was lodged and refused, and by whom. Whether any named person committed a criminal offence. Whether the events are one coordinated black-budget campaign or a series of separate institutional decisions that compounded. The exact Brooke website. The Guitar barcode resource. A complete file-by-file authentication of the GitHub repository, including any commit count. Those are H, outstanding, or G, unverified. They are not withdrawn.

Does the cumulative record justify an independent investigation? Yes, as a recommendation of this edition, category E. The justification does not require the assassination account to be proved first. It is justified by the combination of a large published documentary archive, a current humanitarian emergency stated in public, named statutory duties that answer food, medicine, housing, safeguarding and access to money, and the absence of a single published reasoned determination that takes the archive document by document and says what is accepted, what is rejected, and why. Separate institutional failure can justify an independent examination even if coordination is never proved. Coordination remains an allegation.

What must happen now, whether or not historical liability is admitted. Food, medication, a safe place to live with Crystal, a usable path to his own money for essentials, one accountable coordinating contact, preservation of records, and a written decision trail. Those steps are not a finding that anyone is guilty. Refusing them until guilt is proved is the harm the Great Reckoning names.

2. The central declaration

I exist.

I exist despite more than thirty-five years of institutional encounters, government correspondence, complaints, administrative decisions, professional destruction, homelessness, poverty, displacement, disability, alleged threats, failures of protection and repeated attempts to obtain justice.

I exist despite having reported serious allegations about the conduct of public officials, politicians, government agencies, police, service providers, media organisations and members of the legal profession.

I exist despite having spent decades collecting the words, decisions, correspondence and official records of the very institutions whose conduct I have questioned.

I exist despite having had to become the principal archivist, researcher, publisher, investigator and public advocate for my own circumstances, because the meaningful human assistance that should have made an extensive public website unnecessary did not arrive.

I exist, and I have not disappeared. The central proposition is that my existence, survival, testimony and documentary archive constitute an unresolved public-interest matter. The Australian Government, its ministers, public officials, agencies, police, legal institutions, media organisations and publicly funded service providers cannot properly avoid examination of documentary evidence simply because the person who assembled it is controversial, disabled, gay, has a psychiatric history, or has challenged the institutions concerned.

The examination must not begin with the presumption that I am right about every allegation. Nor may it begin with the presumption that I am wrong. It must begin with the evidence. The question is not whether an official has publicly acknowledged my account. The question is what the documentary record establishes.

I wrote the prophetic line, and I place it here as prophecy and as accusation, classified D: I exist. That is a problem for the government, and also an existential risk immediately exposing its corruption. The problem is not that a disabled man is alive. The problem, if the record supports it, is that a democracy kept a man in the condition of the guilty without a charge, and called the condition care. Corruption, in that sentence, is my name for the refusal to answer evidence. It is not yet a finding of the National Anti-Corruption Commission.

Has a pattern of institutional conduct, administrative decisions, omissions, financial restrictions, failures of protection, professional damage and denial of effective remedies produced cumulative detriment over more than thirty-five years? The pattern is what I testify to. Cumulative detriment is the analytical frame of this edition. It is established as a description of my lived account, and as a hypothesis that the linked documents are capable of testing. It is not established as a single judicial cause of action.

Has the interaction of otherwise separate decisions deprived me of the practical attributes necessary to live with dignity, independence and security? My answer is yes. The edition's answer is that the attributes — income, housing, safety, employment, a lawyer, movement, reputation, and a response — are the right list, and that each removal has to be proved from a document before it is called a breach. The list itself is the right question. A democracy is not measured by whether a man can still post a website. It is measured by whether he can eat, leave, and be heard without the website.

3. Scope, methodology and the limit of this edition

This edition was prepared for publication on the SOS site on 4 November 2026, from the author's statement, from the pages and files already published on this site, and from the official statutory and treaty texts linked by their public URLs. It obeys the master command by answering it in one document, with the links kept, with allegations kept as allegations, and with the humanitarian demand not postponed.

It does not claim a completed crawl. The command required every directory of the GitHub repository, every nested PDF, every commit, every page of the SOS, and a master register of every hyperlink. A repository described as holding on the order of 1,353 commits and a directory listing beyond a thousand entries cannot be honestly certified, in this edition, as fully read. Where a file is linked, the link is the invitation to open it. Where a file is not linked, it has not been examined here. The first screen of GitHub is not the archive. Pagination remains mandatory for any later investigator. This paragraph is the disclosure the command required in place of a false claim of completeness.

The SOS website and the GitHub repository are complementary sources, not interchangeable copies. This site establishes the published narrative, the current request for safety, and the structure of the testimony. GitHub provides a separate documentary repository in which individual files and historical records can be examined. Cross-reference is not automatic corroboration. Duplicate publication of one letter is one letter.

No original file in the repository was modified, renamed or overwritten by this edition. This page is a new publication on the SOS. It is not a substitute reconstruction of the repository.

Spiritual language is recorded as faith. It is not treated as proof of a criminal allegation, and it is not used as a reason to discard a document. Psychiatric history is not used as a substitute for reading a letter. The existence of a large archive is not used as proof of every interpretation inside it.

4. Source register

Each of the following is a primary or additional source named by the author. The register records the URL. It does not record a completed authentication.

- SOS — this publication. Narrative, safety, chronology, Ben's texts, the law pages, the indictment, the works.
- Original repository and GitHub Pages reading copy.
- barrandodger.com.
- Rebuild repository and rebuild pages.
- Church repository and church pages.

- Ministry repository.
- Backup repository and backup pages.
- onyx-spruce-tulip-falcon.grok.me.
- Finance archive.
- Official Government Documents Register, with the reading copy on this site.
- Unresolved, and not invented: the exact Brooke website; the resource called the Guitar barcode. Both remain mandatory source requirements until the archive itself yields the URL.

On this site, the command's named discovery targets include, and are not exhausted by: Safety, Ben's texts, Able Point, the notice, the FOI file, the master, the command, the directory, the record, the forensic command, the nation, the claim, the witness, the cosmic reckoning, the divine reckoning, the letter, the bank, exile, two generations, the minister, official letters, preservation, the works, the publishing house.

5. How to read every allegation in this master

The author believes the events are connected. He believes decisions by different people repeatedly contributed to his detriment. He believes the cumulative history matters. He also believes, and this edition agrees as a rule of reading, that no one should dismiss a large body of records merely because the person who assembled it is disabled, has experienced psychiatric treatment, is poor, is gay, has been homeless, or has made allegations against powerful institutions. The relevant question is whether the source has been preserved, whether it can be authenticated, what it establishes, and whether the matters deserve further examination.

Categories used from here on, in brackets after a proposition where it matters: official record; documented fact; personal testimony; allegation; inference; interpretation; spiritual belief; unresolved question. They are not a demand that the testimony be softened. They are how a stranger can see what was said, what was experienced, and what is believed to follow.

6. The prophetic frame, kept as faith

The author's spiritual testimony is that God sustained him through human abandonment, that survival and publication are evidence of divine preservation, and that the favour of God is on his life so that the record could be finished. He describes survival as a form of spiritual resurrection. This edition records that faith and does not ridicule it, pathologise it, or adopt it as a finding. Religious belief is not proof of a crime. Unconventional religious language is not a reason to ignore a letter on letterhead. Survival is not evidence that the preceding harm was harmless. The fact that he is alive does not retire the obligation to investigate.

The scriptural sentences he asks to stand beside the record, as scripture and not as exhibits, include the line already carried on this site from Revelation 12:11, that they overcame by the blood of the Lamb and by the word of their testimony, and the prophetic demand of Amos 5:24 that justice roll down like waters. Isaiah 1:17 says learn to do good, seek justice, correct oppression, bring justice to the fatherless, plead for the widow. Those verses are not Australian law. They are the moral language in which the author refuses to accept that a vulnerable man can be filed until he disappears. Time is the witness. Truth is the judge. The witness remains.

The ministry he describes on the front of this site — that when people ask how he survived, the answer is that God did it — is the purpose he gives the record. It is not a jurisdiction. A gospel does not quash a subpoena, and a subpoena does not silence a gospel. Both can sit in the same life if the reader will keep them labelled.

7. NDIS Code of Conduct — the breaches alleged

Classification of this section: allegation and testimony, mapped onto a real legal instrument, not a finding that the Commission has made. The Code is at ndiscommission.gov.au. It binds registered and unregistered providers, key personnel and workers. The author applies it to Able Point, to the workers he names on the front of this SOS — Cass Kim, Alyssie, Danny, Ben, Brett, Rachel — and to the support-coordination arrangement he attributes to Sukhi Tear at Diversitas. Each application below is what he says the duty required, and what he says happened instead.

Respect for individual rights and self-determination. A participant is not a roster problem. Self-determination includes the decision to leave an arrangement he experiences as unsafe, the decision to spend his own money on food, and the decision to keep his dog. He says the practical content of his days was the opposite: movement depended on a worker, money depended on an office he could not reach through the bank's own channels, and protest at that dependence was recorded as his threat rather than as their withdrawal. If the progress notes describe a participant who refused support, the notes and the food have to be read together. A note that he was "heightened" does not answer a note, if one exists, that there was no food in the house.

Privacy. He alleges that his life, his psychiatric history and a sexual narrative were circulated as a reason not to believe him and not to house him. The Code's privacy duty is not the Privacy Act, but it points the same direction. The question for the Commission is who, inside the provider, was told what, and whether that telling was for support or for discredit. He also alleges a missing-person classification that travelled across states under a coordinator he had not met. A missing-person record is a public-safety tool. Used repeatedly while support continues to be billed, it requires an explanation of who reported, on what facts, and what welfare check followed. The screen he has published is dated, in his account, 25 June 2025. The image on this site is not-a-missing-person.jpg. The police record behind it is outstanding.

Safe and competent support. Safety is the point of the SOS. He says he reported threats, that workers would not report them, and that he was left in the environment. Competent support, on a day when a person has no food and no way to the bank, is not a speech about his tone. It is food, a safe exit, and an incident report. He says he received an accusation and a departure. The 30 October 2026 account is on the front page of this site. It is testimony. The roster for that day is the document that makes it a compliance fact or a disputed fact.

Integrity, honesty and transparency. He says Rachel will not provide government identification, that the legal name and ABNs associated with the service have changed, and that there is no ordinary office a participant can attend. Transparency is how a participant knows who is being paid to be in his home. A refusal to identify the responsible person is, if it happened as he describes, not a small rudeness. It is the condition in which every other duty becomes unenforceable, because there is no one to name on the complaint. ABN Lookup and the NDIS provider register are the independent sources. They have not been pasted here as a finding. They are the next documents.

Prompt action on safety and quality. Prompt is the word the Code uses because harm does not wait for a quarterly audit. A threat, a refusal of food, a block on banking, and a request to leave are same-week facts. A complaint that returns as a suggestion to contact the person who is not answering is the circular process he describes in the published appeal. Prompt action would have been a different provider, a welfare check, and a written plan. He says he got the circle.

Prevent and respond to violence, exploitation, neglect and abuse. Neglect, in ordinary language and in safeguarding language, includes the failure to provide the necessities the funding exists to secure. Exploitation includes a financial arrangement that pays the people who keep him dependent. Abuse includes humiliation, sexualised reputation harm, and the use of a mental-health label to avoid a police report. He alleges all three. He alleges they were not a single worker's bad day but the business model: blood money, in his words, for complicity. That phrase is his moral judgment, category D and interpretation. The invoices, the hours, and the incident log are the way to test whether the money and the harm travelled together. Receiving public money for legitimate support is not exploitation. Receiving it while refusing the support, or while preventing the participant from leaving, is the question he has put on the public record.

8. Human rights — the treaties Australia has ratified

The official statement of Australia's participation is the Attorney-General's Department page already linked. This edition does not replace that page and does not invent a ratification date in place of it. The reader who needs the instrument status should open the Department's page and the Australian Treaties Library. The obligation exists at international law. It is not, by itself, a charge in a local court.

What the author says the ICCPR requires in his life is concrete. Article 7 is the prohibition on torture and on cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment. He says the combination of deprivation, harassment he experiences as technological and organised, psychiatric detention in place of housing, and a reputation constructed so that no one would help, meets that description. Article 9 is liberty and security of the person. Sixteen hospitalisations, in his account for homelessness rather than for a psychosis his first discharge summary is said to have excluded, are a liberty fact. Article 17 is privacy, engaged by missing-person publication, by sexual rumour, and by any unlawful access to his information. Article 19 is his right to publish this record. Article 26 is equal protection, engaged if the reason he was not believed is that he is gay, disabled, or psychiatrically labelled.

What he says the ICESCR requires is food, housing, social security that arrives as money he can use, and health care that includes the medication he is still asking for. A pension that exists on a statement and cannot be spent on bread is not the substance of article 9 or article 11. What he says the CRPD requires is equal recognition before the law, freedom from exploitation, and the right to live independently in the community with the supports that make independence real. A funded plan that leaves him unable to leave the house is the inversion of article 19. What he says the Convention Against Torture requires is an investigation wherever public officials are alleged to have participated in or acquiesced in prohibited treatment. He alleges that acquiescence. He does not hold a committee view. He holds the allegation, and he holds the documents he could collect without the State's help.

The Refugee Convention is engaged only with care. He uses the language of political exile and of an asylum claim inside his own country. That is his description of displacement and of seeking protection from the government of which he is a citizen. It is not, in this edition, a claim that he has been recognised as a refugee under the Convention Relating to the Status of Refugees. Internal displacement and a citizen's plea for protection are human-rights facts to examine. They are not automatically an international refugee status. The unusual seriousness of the question is exactly that the institutions he says failed him are the ones a citizen is told to trust.

9. Disability discrimination

The Disability Discrimination Act is linked in the Great Reckoning. The author alleges direct discrimination, in that he was treated worse because of disability: complaints reclassified as symptoms, legal help withheld, police declining to take a report from a man already marked psychiatric, hospitals responding to homelessness with detention. He alleges indirect discrimination, in that conditions of access to his own money — app, NetBank, telephone banking, a worker as the only transport — were conditions he could not meet without surrendering the independence the NDIS says it exists to build, and those conditions hit a cognitively injured, unsupported man harder than they would hit a person with family money and a lawyer. He alleges discrimination in accommodation, in services, and in the administration of Commonwealth programs, which is the territory of section 29.

He also alleges that his being gay was used as the instrument of the discrimination: a false sexual report, gay shaming, a humiliation he traces to a police family, and a standing story that he was a sexual danger despite, in his account, no arrest and no charge. Disability discrimination law and sexual-orientation protections are different statutes and different elements. He asks that both be examined, and that neither be used to explain away the other. A gay disabled man is not a special category of unbelievable. He is a person the law already names.

The defence he expects to hear is that every decision was clinical, or financial, or “risk”. Risk is the word he says was used by a minister and by family and by workers. Risk, unsupported by a charge, becomes a career-long sentence. If the risk assessment exists, it should be produced. If it is his disability, the Act asks whether the less restrictive adjustment was refused. Leaving him without food was not an adjustment. It was the harm.

10. Workers’ compensation and insurance denial

This section exists because the author instructed that the denial of workers’ compensation and of insurance be included as evidence of the injustice, and because the archive already points at Comcare and at WorkSafe as institutions in the documentary field. Classification: allegation, plus a demand for the claim files. This edition does not invent a claim number, an insurer’s name beyond the public schemes, or a refusal letter it has not opened.

The factual core he offers is the 2021 injury complex — hypoxia, asystole, resuscitation, a cognitive injury, a discharge formulation he says named adjustment disorder and excluded psychosis and delusion — and the absence of compensation afterwards. He says the tragedy was whitewashed by carers, by the hospital, by a mental-health worker, and by family. He says that a person in Phillip Glass’s position would expect workers’ compensation for an injury at work, and compensation if a home and a position were destroyed, and that the same expectation was refused to him. He asks that Comcare, the Victorian workers’ compensation scheme applicable to any employment then in force, any NSW scheme applicable to later events, and any private policy that answered hospital, motor or public liability, be required to say whether a claim was made, whether a claim was discouraged, whether a claim was refused, and on what medical and legal basis.

The legal point is not that every injury in a life is a workers' compensation injury. Employment has to be proved. A statutory journey or a funded support shift may or may not be "work" under the relevant Act. A hospital's liability may sit in negligence rather than in workers' compensation. Insurance may sit in a medical indemnity policy he will never see unless a court or a complaint body compels it. The injustice he names is the prior step: the pathways were not opened, explained, or decided in writing, while he was busy surviving. A denial that is never issued is harder to appeal than a denial that is. Administrative annihilation includes the refusal to generate the document that would let him appeal. He wants the document, even if the document is a refusal, because a refusal has reasons and a clock. Silence has neither, and it still leaves the injury in his body.

11. Denial of legal aid

He calls the denial of legal aid an absurd inversion of the reason legal aid exists. The reason is the person who cannot pay, who faces the State, and whose liberty, housing or money is in the State's hands. He says that in Victoria he was brought toward a court date without legal aid, in a sequence he connects with the minister, police, a hospital and a Magistrates' Court, and that the result was exile. He says that in New South Wales the financial-administration arrangements and the Guardian relationship contributed to an inability to obtain Legal Aid to challenge the very arrangements that bound his money. If that circularity is in the refusal letters, it is an access-to-justice fact of the first rank. If the refusals say something else — means, merit, a conflict, a missing document — those reasons must be published to him in a form he can read and review.

The practical outcome he describes is that a disabled person cannot obtain representation to challenge the orders that make representation unaffordable. That outcome does not require a conspiracy to be intolerable. It can be produced by ordinary rules applied without anyone looking at the circle. He alleges the circle was intended. The letters will show the rules that were used. Either way he was without a lawyer while publishing, alone, the record the lawyer should have been reading. Victoria Legal Aid and Legal Aid NSW are the decision-makers he names. Their guidelines are public. Their reasons in his matters are not, in this edition, reproduced as documents. They are demanded.

12. Political exile

He says he was forced to leave Victoria and to relocate to New South Wales, and that the leaving was not a residential preference. He calls it political exile. He describes, before the leaving, employment damage, housing loss, police interactions, complaints, threats, poverty, disability, periods in a vehicle, no lawyer, and no protection. He describes, after the leaving, a further displacement from housing into a car associated with Salman Kazmi, an NDIS provider he says presented mobility as a favour and delivered him toward danger. He alleges a further flight, of Houd Meraby from Melbourne to Sydney, and a warning from a stranger that the purpose was to erase him. He alleges he was an internally displaced person and an asylum seeker inside the democracy of his citizenship, and that an AVO and a media silence made that status unspeakable.

This edition does not require an official proclamation of exile before it will examine the movement. Forced displacement, constructive exclusion and political exile are descriptions to test against dates, addresses, court listings and plane or payment records. The international legal definition of a refugee is a different test, and it has not been applied here as if a determination existed. What is before the reader is a citizen who says the government he asked for protection became the subject of the complaint, and who published the complaint because the protection did not come. The pages on this site are exile is not erasure and the exile of two generations.

13. Administrative annihilation and social erasure

Administrative annihilation is his name for the progressive removal of the practical tools of citizenship: money he can touch, a lawyer, a house, a job, a name that can be said on radio, a police station that will take a report, a bank app, a car, an identity document he can use without a worker standing over him. Social erasure, or social death, is his name for the condition of being alive while treated as already gone: missing-person screens, a ban he says fell on media that once booked him, family who would not protest the exile, professionals who would not meet his eye, a public that was given a sexual story instead of a documentary one. Civil death, as he uses it, is not claimed in this edition as a formal legal status under an old common-law bill of attainder. It is the lived description of being unable to do ordinary citizen things. The pages already published are the architecture of administrative annihilation, civil erasure and genocide via attrition. The last of those titles is his moral and prophetic name for destruction by accumulation rather than by a single order. It is not a finding that the international crime of genocide has been established. The elements of that crime are specific, including intent to destroy a protected group. He is asking for the accumulation to be seen. He is not asking this page to enter a conviction under the Criminal Code for genocide.

The test he offers a reader is simple and hard. Can he access his own money today. Can he obtain a lawyer. Can he leave. Can he get protection. Can he work. Can he have a complaint investigated. Can he keep his dog and his privacy. If the answer to several of those is no, the phrase administrative annihilation is not poetry. It is an inventory.

14. Psychiatric weaponisation

He alleges that psychiatric history has been used to dismiss complaints, to avoid investigating events, to discredit documents, to restrict legal aid, to justify detention, to minimise abuse, and to spare institutions the trouble of accountability. He offers, as the counter-document inside his own testimony, a first discharge summary he attributes to Dr Lagrasso: adjustment disorder, no psychosis, no delusion, after a near-fatal event and a brain injury, with no compensation. Adjustment disorder, as he correctly notes in ordinary language, is a response to identifiable stressors. It is not a licence to ignore the stressors. Later hospitalisations, sixteen in about five years, he says were for not having a home, and for being the victim of political targeting and financial coercion, while he was identified as the risk. He says he wrote to Eustina at Wyong because he did not want police using a mental-health order to put him in hospital as a substitute for the poverty Able Point created by denying him a worker to reach the bank.

A diagnosis can be real and still be weaponised. A disagreement with a diagnosis does not prove weaponisation. The method of this edition is to ask, of each event, whether a psychiatric sentence was substituted for an investigation of the event. A death threat is not answered by a medication review alone. A missing bank balance is not a delusion until the statement is read. Ben’s messages are not a symptom until the messages are authenticated or shown to be fabricated. He alleges V2K, military harassment, gang stalking, surveillance, psychological torture, sexualised harassment and continuous harassment in his residence. Those reports are recorded as testimony. Recordings, messages, witnesses and independently verifiable incidents are the evidence that would move them. This edition does not declare that a military or intelligence operation is responsible. It does not declare that the testimony is delusion. It refuses both automatic beliefs, because both are ways of not looking.

15. Entrapment, abuse and neglect

Entrapment, as he uses it, is not the criminal-law defence taught in a textbook about police inducing an offence. It is his description of a closed system: no money, no car, no lawyer, no alternative provider, a worker who can leave, a coordinator in another state, a guardian on the account, and a public story that makes the next person afraid to help. Inside that system he alleges abuse and neglect by the service paid to prevent them. He alleges the financial beneficiaries were the people who were supposed to support him. The way to examine that is contracts, invoices, plan funds, related-party payments, and conflicts. Payment for support actually delivered is lawful. Payment for support withheld, or for a dependence that was the product, is the exploitation question under the Code and under the CRPD.

He names the day he says the system showed its face: a worker who knew there was no food, no money, no phone and no bank access, who accused him of being a threat, and who left, with management's permission not to put up with him. Neglect is sometimes a failure to arrive. He says this was a decision to depart. The difference matters. A failure to arrive can be understaffing. A decision to depart, after knowledge of hunger, is an act. He wants that act in an incident report. He does not have the provider's report. He has published his.

16. Whistleblower retaliation

He says the detriment followed disclosure: that he spoke about corruption, including funds he says were known and not called out, that he advocated for mental-health reform and then fell into the system he had criticised, and that the response was exile, a sexual story, a financial administration, a media silence and an attempted erasure. Retaliation under the Public Interest Disclosure Act is a legal conclusion. It needs a disclosure that qualifies, a recipient that qualifies, a detriment, and a causal link. Documents already published, by filename, include a Federal Court PID assessment of 27 March 2023 and a June 2023 decision not to allocate a disclosure. Those documents are evidence that a statutory process ran. They may also be evidence that the process did not protect him. Both readings are possible until the letters are read in full beside the later harm. He asks that any detrimental action after a qualifying disclosure be assessed on its own timeline: disclosure, date, recipient, subsequent act, and the reason the institution wrote down at the time. A reason invented later is part of the documentary trap he has named: the system's own record becoming the evidence, when the first letter and the last letter do not match.

17. Surveillance, torture and gang stalking

He reports V2K, military harassment, gang stalking, surveillance, psychological torture, coordinated and sexualised harassment, and harassment that does not stop at the door of his residence. The SOS is, in his account, a public request for safety made because the people around him would not make the report. This edition writes those words down as his words. It separates four things that are constantly collapsed: an observable event, such as a message, a visit, a noise, a person at a door; a recording, if one exists; an interpretation, such as the conclusion that the event is military or centrally tasked; and a subjective experience, including experiences that medicine may classify in one way and that he classifies as assault. Collapsing them into "delusion" is a refusal to investigate the observable layer. Collapsing them into “therefore the government did it” is a refusal to investigate any other cause. He has asked for neither collapse. He has asked for the observable layer to be taken seriously while he is kept safe.

Torture, in his testimony, also includes the slow version: hunger, the removal of medication, the hospital used as a warehouse for a man without a house, the reputation used as a weapon, the years. The legal elements under the Convention Against Torture and under any domestic offence are stricter than the moral use of the word. He knows the difference and he refuses to let the stricter test become a reason to leave the slow version unexamined. Cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment is a separate international category from torture. It may be the category an honest investigator reaches even if the purpose element of torture is not proved. He would rather have that honest category than a slogan, and he would rather have the slogan published than be told the slow version is not worth a file.

18. Institutional murder and its cover-up

He alleges an attempted assassination and a continuing effort to erase him physically, and he alleges the cover-up that follows when the attempt fails and the man lives to publish. He says a person he understood as connected with federal policing acknowledged a close call, that a report concerning a girl was fabricated to damage him, that an NDA was signed, and that Ben, an NDIS provider, moved from thinking him delusional to saying police had confirmed the close call, that corruption went to the top, and that Ben himself was afraid. The messages are published at Ben’s texts, including the page images 54, 64 and 65. He says Ben was asked to send the material to the Federal Police and did. He says the authorities intervened not from care but because publication would have exposed a minister. That last sentence is inference. The messages, if authentic, are evidence of what Ben communicated. They are not a court exhibit until provenance is done. They are already too serious to leave as a vibe.

The examination he demands, and which this edition cannot complete from the website alone, is: the date, the place, the original reports, the medical records of any injury, the police event numbers, the witnesses, the communications, the physical evidence, and any later investigation. Each assertion is separate. “Ben said police confirmed a close call” is not the same proposition as “an assassination was ordered”. “An NDA was signed” is not the same proposition as “the NDA’s terms were these”. He does not ask that the lack of a prosecution be treated as proof the event was impossible. He does not ask that the conversation be treated as proof the event occurred. He asks that the questions stay open and be investigated by someone who does not report to the people named. He uses the words institutional murder. This edition prints them as his charge, not as its finding. A finding of murder is for a jury on admissible evidence. A finding that the published messages require a police response is a safeguarding and public-interest conclusion this edition is prepared to state as a recommendation.

19. Coercive financial control and family violence

He alleges coercive financial control: money used to govern movement, food, speech and the chance to leave. He places that control in public offices, in a trustee, in a bank’s obedience to an instruction, and in family. He says his mother, April, sobbed a legal AVO that guaranteed zero contact, and that family slept in comfortable houses while he lived in a car with his therapy dog, and that they would not protest the exile, the poverty or the asylum claim, and that they worked with police to identify him as the risk. Family violence law in New South Wales is capable of recognising more than bruises. Financial abuse and coercive control are part of the contemporary legal conversation and, where the statute has been amended to cover them, part of the text. He asks for the financial facts to be assessed in that light and also in the fiduciary light of a trustee who is not a relative but who holds a similar power over bread.

An AVO is an official record if it exists. Its terms matter. A no-contact order is not, by itself, proof of who was the primary aggressor in a thirty-five-year story. He says the order functioned as a silencing device, including of his name in media. If the order says something narrower, the narrower text controls. He asks for the order. He also asks that the existence of a family-law or personal-violence order not be used as a reason to ignore the documentary archive. Families can be harmed and also be wrong. He is saying they aligned with the harm. That is testimony. The alignment is a question of what they did, not of what he feels about them.

20. No arrest, no charge, and the suffering of the guilty

He states that there has been no arrest, no charge and no legal process establishing the sexual allegations used against him, including labels of rapist or paedophile which this edition will not repeat as fact and which he says are false. The only crime, in his account, was the manufacture of the allegation: a woman he says he had known in his youth, a payment, a police family, a humiliation of a gay man, later retold by Ben as something police confirmed. He says he has lived as if convicted. Housing, work, care, police protection and ordinary friendship are the sentences that can be served without a courtroom. Libel and slander are the civil names. Character assassination is the ordinary name. A black-budget campaign is his name for a funded, deniable program of that destruction. This edition does not find that a classified budget existed. It finds that he has alleged one, and that the rational response to a published message thread about a paid false report is to ask the police, in writing, whether the report exists, whether it was investigated, and whether it was withdrawn. The absence of a charge against him is significant exactly as he says. It does not prove the report was never made. It proves he was not convicted. Living as if convicted, without the conviction, is the extra-judicial punishment he names. Extra-judicial is a description of punishment outside a sentence. It becomes a legal conclusion if the facts show officials or publicly funded actors imposed the harm without lawful process. He says that is what they did. The process that did occur — hospital orders, guardian orders, AVOs, PID non-allocations — may have been lawful in form. Lawful form used to impose a punishment the criminal law did not impose is the question of improper purpose. It is an administrative-law question and, if the facts are dark enough, a criminal one. It is not decided on this page.

21. Conditions designed to solicit suicide

He says the conditions — abuse, neglect, poverty, entrapment, erasure, the removal of medication, the invitation to be hospitalised for distress that the conditions created — were a method. The method, in his account, was to solicit suicide, and failing that to force mental-health services and police to incarcerate him. He says he has been through that incarceration sixteen times and is still denied medication and humanity. He says he is not suicidal. He says he wants to live. Both sentences are in the published SOS and both are repeated here because they are the opposite of the story in which his protest is itself the illness.

A system that responds to “I am hungry and I cannot reach my bank” with “he may be a mental-health risk” has chosen a door. He wrote to a community mental-health service to say he did not want that door used as the substitute for food. If the service’s only tool is the hospital, the tool is the problem he is describing. Ineffective treatment, repeated, is not neutral. At some point repetition is a policy. He says the policy was the erasure. An investigator who rejects that purpose can still condemn the repetition. Sixteen admissions for a man who says the diagnosis at the start excluded psychosis, and who says the constant variable was homelessness, is a clinical-governance question even if it is never a conspiracy. He is entitled to the admission records, the legal bases, the treatment given, and the discharge addresses. A discharge to no address is an answer to his question, and it is the wrong answer.

22. The cumulative detriment model

The attributes he says were removed, and which this edition adopts as the checklist, are income, compensation, money he can use, housing, personal safety, employment, human rights in practice, legal rights in practice, disability support that arrives, freedom of movement, financial independence, personal autonomy, access to justice, reputation, social participation, and effective protection. They interact. Financial restriction prevents leaving. Being unable to leave prolongs the place he says is unsafe. Disability increases dependence on the provider he is accusing. The accusation makes the provider's continuation the only offer. Legal-aid refusal prevents a challenge to the financial order. The financial order is cited, he fears, as a reason related to legal aid. The psychiatric file changes how the police officer hears the sentence "I am being hunted". The reputation closes the newspaper that might have checked the file. None of those arrows is proved merely by being drawn. Each arrow is a question with a document at both ends. The model's value is that it stops the institutional trick of winning every individual complaint by five percent while the person loses his life by accumulation. Genocide via attrition is his prophetic name for that trick. Administrative annihilation is his technical name. Social death is the social name. The checklist is the way a reviewer who rejects his names can still do the work.

Competing explanations are mandatory. One is ordinary bureaucratic fragmentation: no one was in charge, each office followed its rule, the harm was real and the malice was not. One is clinical: a serious mental illness produced a persecutory interpretation of ordinary refusals, and the documents he reads as proof are the documents of services trying, badly, to help. One is mixed: some events happened as he says, some were misread, and the misreading was then used by people who found it convenient. One is his: a long, funded, deniable campaign, with a ministerial centre of gravity, to destroy a witness. This edition does not pick the last explanation as a finding. It rejects the second explanation as a sufficient response, because a clinical hypothesis does not authenticate a bank statement, a text message, or an ombudsman reference, and because sixteen admissions are not a reason to stop counting the admissions. It treats the first explanation as possible and still unacceptable, because fragmentation is not a defence to hunger. It treats the third as the minimum honest position for a stranger: look, one document at a time, and do not require a single mastermind before you buy the man food.

23. Journalism, the university, the Parliament and the press

The public-interest history he asks to have verified, not worshipped, is specific. A PhD from Victoria University in 2020. A thesis titled A Splice of My Life. A book, Recovered, Not Cured: A Journey Through Schizophrenia, and the awards he says attached to it. Employment at The Age. Publicity in the Herald Sun. The end of the employment. An appearance inside Parliament House advocating mental-health reform before the NDIS existed in its later form. A documentary association he names as the Cunningham Dax Collection and a film he calls Madame. These are checkable against a university library, a publisher, a parliamentary diary, a newspaper archive and a production agreement. This edition does not attach a citation to a library catalogue it has not opened. It records the claim as testimony and as a mandatory verification item. The significance, if the curriculum vitae is real, is that the man was not a stranger to the public square.

He was used by it, as an advocate and as a story, and he says the use became exposure, gay shaming, and the loss of a profession. Defamation, privacy, discrimination and employment law are the doctrines. The articles, the headlines, the dates and the deed of settlement, if any, are the evidence. They are outstanding as documents in this edition, and they are not outstanding as a memory he is willing to drop.

He says his kindness and his willingness to disclose were exploited. That is a moral allegation about documentary ethics. The contracts and the releases would show what he agreed to. A release signed in illness, or without independent advice, is not the same as a release signed by a studio's equal. He asks for those papers. He is not asking for the film to be unmade. He is asking for the use of his life to be put back inside the truth of what was done with it.

24. The bank, the trustee, and the fiduciary

The fiduciary question is whether a person or office holding his money was obliged to act in his interests, within statutory power, without an undeclared conflict, and with enough left for him to live. A trustee is not a parent and not a jailer. The NSW Trustee and Guardian Act sets functions and duties. The Guardianship Act sets the frame for substitute decisions. He says the car was taken, the bank channels were closed, and the pension was reduced, and that the effect was dependence on the provider he accuses. He says a Goulburn bank manager told him his hands were tied. He says more than a hundred ABN entries were linked, in his research, to the name Barran Resonance Dodger, and that the bank would not give him a proper answer, and that when he insisted he was treated as aggressive and threatened with police. DARVO — deny, attack, reverse victim and offender — is his name for that sequence. It is a description from the literature of abuse. It is not an element of a bank's contract. The element is whether a forty-year customer, as he describes himself, was given a lawful, written, appealable reason for the closure of the channels, and a remaining way to buy food that did not depend on the grace of a support worker. The email is published at the bank. Distinguish three different restrictions, as the command requires: a restriction imposed by a legal order, a bank's own security decision, and a technical fault. He says he has lived all three used as covers for each other. The letters will separate them if they are honest letters. If they are not honest, the contradiction belongs in the contradictions register.

25. Police

He alleges complicity, refusal to investigate, and the use of mental-health detention in place of a criminal investigation of the people he says are harming him. Complicity is not proved by a decision not to charge. It can be supported by a refusal to take a report, a failure to preserve messages, a risk assessment that copies a provider's hostility, or an investigation that never leaves the psychiatric file. He asks for the incident numbers. He asks that the Ben thread be put to the police agency said to have confirmed a close call, for a yes or a no. A yes would be extraordinary. A no would also be information, and it would have to explain the messages rather than smirk at them. Oversight sits with the bodies that supervise the relevant force, not with the force alone, where the allegation is about the force. He does not ask this edition to declare an officer a criminal. He asks the oversight body to open a file that is not returned to the officer named.

26. What a dignified professional response would have been

He says no single professional has acknowledged him or given a dignified response to the fact-checked public website. A dignified response is not agreement. A dignified response is: we received the URL; we opened these documents; we accept these three facts; we dispute these four; we do not yet know these five; here is who will decide; here is the date; here is how you eat in the meantime. Anything shorter, from a person paid to hold a fiduciary, clinical, legal or public office, is the ethical failure he is charging. The codes are linked from the Great Reckoning: the public-service code, the solicitors' rules, the medical code, the NDIS Code. Ethics that cannot survive a website are not ethics. They are manners for the comfortable. He has published the website. The response he has experienced, he says, is slander in a whisper, which is how a profession keeps its hands clean while a man stays dirty in the eyes of the next landlord. Whispered slander is hard to sue and easy to live under. He is asking for the whisper to be replaced by a signed paragraph.

27. Chronology that this edition will and will not invent

The command asked for a chronology from 1990 to 4 November 2026 with a documentary source on every line, and forbade invented dates. This edition therefore refuses to fill the thirty-five years with plausible years. The dates it is willing to print are the dates the author or the published filenames have already stated.

- 1990 to 4 November 2026 — the period he asks to have examined. The start is his frame, not a document cited in this paragraph.
- February 2021 — Werribee Mercy events, as alleged.
- 5 August 2021 — an email identified in the published account.
- 5 October 2021 — Victorian Ombudsman outcome said to bear reference C/21/14020.
- 15 November 2021 — a Commonwealth Ombudsman complaint filename published in the archive and linked from the great declaration page.
- 2022 — OAIC / FOI correspondence, including the file read on this site as FOI/2022/045.
- 27 March 2023 — Federal Court PID assessment, by published filename.
- 18 June 2023 — notification of a decision not to allocate a disclosure, by published filename.
- 2020 — PhD, Victoria University, as testified, thesis A Splice of My Life. The year is his. The library record is still to be pinned to a URL in a later edition.
- 25 June 2025 — missing-person screen, as published.
- 20 November 2025 — NDIS plan approval, by published filename.
- 1 December 2025 — Anglicare safety assessment, by published filename.
- 20 January 2026 — accommodation request, by published filename.
- 16 October 2026 — The Enemy Within, as identified.
- 18 October 2026 — consolidated formal notice.
- 20 October 2026 — urgent formal complaint, as listed.
- 21 October 2026 — rebuild additions, including the OAIC letter, as identified.
- 28 October 2026 — edition he describes as 83 pages, with manifest and timestamp receipts.
- 30 October 2026 — the account, on the front of this SOS, of the worker who left.

- 1 November 2026 — the Great Reckoning and the humanitarian demand.
- 4 November 2026 — this master edition.

Everything else in the thirty-five years — The Age, the Herald Sun, Parliament House, the Dax documentary, the years in the car, the move across the border — is ordered by him as a life and is not given fake day-dates here. An investigator with the employment file and the court file can date them. This page will not decorate the gap.

28. Contradictions register

A contradiction register that invents contradictions is a fraud. This edition opens the register with the contradictions that would matter, and with the status of each.

- Hospital narrative. He says the records refer to hypoxia, asystole and resuscitation, and also that the aftermath was minimised. Status: H. The two propositions can both be true. They are a contradiction only if a later letter denies an event an earlier clinical note records. The notes and the letter are not both in the margin of this page.
- Psychiatric formulation. He says the first discharge summary excluded psychosis and delusion, and that later systems treated him as psychotic when he reported external harm. Status: D plus H. If the later forms contradict the first formulation without new evidence, that is a clinical contradiction with legal consequences. It has to be read, not assumed.
- Risk. He says he was identified as a risk to family and to a minister, and that he was the person at risk. Status: D. The assessments, if produced, either show a basis or they show a label.
- Bank access. He says channels were closed and that a manager could not open them. Status: D, with the email published. The bank’s reason, if it differs from the trustee’s reason, is the contradiction to capture.
- Ben and the official denial, if one is ever issued, that police discussed a close call. Status: C for the published messages; H for any police record. A future denial that does not engage the messages will be a contradiction of process even before it is a contradiction of fact.
- Counts of the archive. Any public page that states a document total, a hash total, or a commit total is the archive speaking about itself. Status: not independently re-counted here. A later precise count that differs is a correction, not a scandal, unless the inflated count was used to mislead a court.

29. The answers the command required

A. Independently established. The publication of this SOS, the existence of the named repositories, the existence of the named statutes and treaties, the existence of the linked filenames, the author’s identity as he gives it, and the humanitarian request with an address and a phone.

B. Supported by multiple documents. Not certified in this edition beyond the fact that the same testimony and some of the same PDFs are published in more than one place. Multiplicity of publication is not multiplicity of proof.

C. Recorded as testimony. The narrative of exile, injury, sixteen hospitalisations, financial restriction, Able Point, Ben’s account as he relates it, legal-aid refusal, and the failure of professionals to answer the website.

D. Unverified allegations. Assassination as a proved plot, a black budget, a ministerial order to kill, the terms of any NDA, the fabrication payment, genocide as an international crime, and any specific dollar of compensation.

E. Institutional failures demonstrated. None are demonstrated in the judicial sense by this edition. The failure to produce a document-by-document answer to a large public archive, while a man publishes that he is without food and medicine, is the failure this edition is prepared to name as the present fact. It is a failure of response. It is visible because the website is visible and the answer is not.

F. Decisions inadequately explained. Every decision he has asked to see and has not been given in a form that answers the evidence: banking, trustee, legal aid, hospital outcome, PID non-allocation, provider withdrawal, missing-person record. “Inadequately” is his characterisation until the reasons are read. If the reasons do not mention the documents he sent, the inadequacy is objective.

G. Duties that may have been breached, if the testimony is made out. NDIS Code duties of safety, integrity, neglect and exploitation; NDIS incident-reporting duties; Disability Discrimination Act duties including adjustments; Privacy Act access and correction; fiduciary and statutory duties of a financial manager; Mental Health Act safeguards; administrative-law duties of reasonableness and proper purpose; duty of care in hospital and in support; whistleblower protections if the statutory gateway is met; the international duties discussed above, at the level at which they bind the State.

H. Consequences documented as his account. Loss of employment, loss of housing, exile, poverty, injury, repeated detention, loss of banking autonomy, loss of reputation, loss of legal representation, and the labour of building the archive in place of a life.

I. Coordination or separate decisions. Not established as coordination. Not disproved. The cumulative model works on either finding. The investigation should look for coordination without requiring it as the price of relief.

J. Practical access to protection and justice. On his testimony, no. On this edition’s limited independent knowledge, he has had to build a public website to ask for food, medicine and a lawyer, which is itself evidence of a failed ordinary path, whether or not every historical allegation is true.

K. Independent investigation. Recommended. Outside the institutions named. With power to compel the hospital file, the police file, the trustee file, the provider file, the bank file, the legal-aid file, and the ombudsman file, and with a duty to report what each shows.

L. Action now. The timetable in the Great Reckoning: 24 hours to name a person, 48 hours to assess food, medicine, shelter and safety, 72 hours for an interim plan, 7 days for a conference he attends, 14 days for an accommodation and autonomy plan, 28 days for a progress report. Preserve the records today, not after the conference. Crystal stays with him. He is not asking to be stored.

30. Recommended immediate measures

One coordinating human being with a name, a telephone and the power to speak to the NDIA, the Commission, the Trustee, the provider and the health service. An interim cash or brokerage path for food, medication, telephone and Crystal that does not wait on liability. A written explanation of the banking block, separating order, bank policy and fault. A copy of the current financial-management instrument. A medication review by a practitioner he consents to, with continuity, not a threat of admission as the price of asking. An accommodation option that is a dwelling, not a suggestion to keep looking, and that includes the dog. A safeguarding assessment of the threats that does not begin with his diagnosis. A police request, in writing, for any event number connected with the Ben messages and the June 2025 missing-person screen. A legal-aid reconsideration with the conflict of interest, if any, declared, and with the circularity of “you have a trustee” forbidden as a complete reason. A preservation notice to every agency named, today. None of these measures acquits anyone. All of them are what a democracy does while it is still deciding.

31. The final public-interest declaration

I exist. That is a problem for the government.

I am a citizen. I am a person with a history, a profession, a doctorate I claim and ask to have checked, a disability, a sexuality, a spiritual name, and a right to the public square. I have been a journalist, an author, a researcher and an advocate. I have stood in Parliament House for people with mental illness and then, I say, been crushed by the system I tried to improve. I have published because publication was the only hearing left. I have made an SOS because I say I need safety. I have described surveillance, psychiatric weaponisation and torture, and I have asked that those words be examined rather than worshipped or sneered at. I have described the loss of my lawyer, my money and my ability to leave. I have survived. I believe God kept me alive to finish the record. The public significance of my being alive does not depend on whether a minister shares that belief.

The record exists whether or not he shares it. The questions exist. The obligation to examine credible evidence does not disappear because the witness was abandoned, discredited, or left without a reply. I am a problem for the government not because my heartbeat proves every charge. I am a problem because I am still here, the documents are still here, and it is no longer responsible to behave as though the questions were never asked.

The appropriate response is not silence, ridicule, automatic psychiatric dismissal, or administrative deflection. It is not the assumption that a man who spent decades collecting records should be ignored because the collection is inconvenient. It is an independent examination, an honest account of institutional conduct, and action wherever neglect, discrimination or a failure of protection is established.

The witness remains. The record remains. The question remains. The right to exist with dignity, safety, independence and equal protection does not depend on the permission of the institutions whose conduct is being examined.

No one should have to be destroyed before they are believed. I want to live. I want to be safe. I want to be free. I want Crystal beside me. I want the truth examined by somebody who is not on the payroll of the answer they prefer.

Dr Richard William McLean, publicly known as Dr Barran Dodger and as Barran Resonance Dodger. 4 November 2026. God’s name, as he gives it in the gospels of this work: Resonata Eternis. The witness remains.

The Great Reckoning of 1 November 2026, in full, follows in the master PDF as the annex, and stands on its own tab at The Great Reckoning. Preservation first. Examination second. Conclusion last.

32. Institutional responsibility map

The command required every relevant institution to be examined for its legal duties, its decision-makers, what it was told, what it received, what it decided, what it did not do, its reasons, any contradiction, any review, any detriment, and whether independent oversight exists. This edition cannot honestly complete that ten-point examination for offices whose internal files are not in the author's hands. What follows is the map of responsibility as a demand: the duty, the allegation as he states it, the document that would settle it, and the limit. Conduct of one employee is not automatically the conduct of a government. Ministerial responsibility, agency responsibility and individual responsibility are separated on purpose.

Prime Minister and Cabinet, and the ministers

He says the Prime Minister gaslit the complaint, and he has published letters he identifies with 2022 and with Anthony Albanese at the Prime Minister page. A letter from a citizen to a prime minister does not, by being sent, prove the prime minister read it or directed a harm. It proves, if the copy is authentic, that the citizen tried the highest office. Ministerial responsibility for the NDIS sits with whoever held the portfolio at the date of each decision. He names Bill Shorten and the period of that ministry. Holding the portfolio is not personal involvement. Personal involvement requires a document: a briefing, a direction, a meeting, a note. He alleges the involvement. The briefing, if it exists, is a cabinet or ministerial record and may be claimed as exempt. Exemption is not the same as non-existence. He asks for the schedule of what was considered, even if the deliberation stays closed. The duty of a minister is to the statute he administers, not to the comfort of the department. If a participant was being harmed inside the scheme, the minister's duty was to see that the regulators and the agency could still function. He says they functioned against him. That is the charge. It is not the finding.

NDIA and the Department of Social Services

The NDIA makes and reviews plans. DSS has portfolio responsibility around the scheme's policy frame. He points to a plan approval whose filename is dated 20 November 2025. The duty is to fund reasonable and necessary supports under section 34 as it stood, and to provide reviews the Act allows. The allegation is that the plan, the coordinator and the providers produced dependence and danger rather than a life. The settling documents are the plan, the plan variation requests, the internal reviews, and the rosters against the funded hours. A plan that says transport, and a life in which transport is a worker who can refuse, is a potential gap between the decision and the delivery. The gap may be the provider's. It may be the agency's, if the agency was told and funded the same provider again. He says both. The file will show who was told.

NDIS Quality and Safeguards Commission

The Commission owns the Code, the Practice Standards for registered providers, and the reportable-incident rules. He is asking it to do the job the Code describes: take the 30 October account, the request to leave, the threat allegations, the identification question around Rachel, and the Ben material insofar as it concerns a provider, and say whether a notification was made and what compliance action followed. A Commission that treats his complaint as a symptom has abandoned the Code. A Commission that opens the incident log and finds it empty has found a different breach. A Commission that finds a proper response has the pleasant duty of saying so with the documents. He has not published that pleasant letter. He says it does not exist in any dignified form.

Australian Human Rights Commission

The Commission can take discrimination complaints within jurisdiction and decline what it cannot take. He asks for a jurisdictional look at disability discrimination and at the human-rights dimensions of the treatment he describes. A decline that names the reason and the correct other door is a lawful act. A decline that does not read the archive is the silence he is charging across professions. He does not claim every administrative failure is unlawful discrimination. He claims the question is inside the Act often enough that a refusal to look is itself the problem.

Commonwealth, NSW and Victorian Ombudsmen

He has published, by filename, a Commonwealth Ombudsman complaint of 15 November 2021, and he identifies a Victorian Ombudsman outcome of 5 October 2021, reference C/21/14020, about the hospital matter. Ombudsmen examine maladministration. They do not try crimes. An outcome letter is an official record of what that office did and did not decide. If C/21/14020 exists and is narrow, the narrowness is part of the truth and must not be inflated into a finding the letter does not make. If the letter closed a question the clinical notes still open, the closure is the documentary trap: the system's own paper, read against the system's other paper. The NSW Ombudsman is the door for NSW agencies within its jurisdiction, which may or may not include the Trustee. Jurisdiction is the first paragraph any honest complaint needs. He asks each office to state its jurisdiction in one sentence and the evidence it read in the next.

National Anti-Corruption Commission and the police forces

The NACC assesses corruption issues within a statutory definition. Not every cruel decision is corrupt. Corruption, in that Act, is a defined thing. He alleges corruption at the highest level, a black budget, and police complicity. Those allegations are the reason to assess jurisdiction, not the reason to skip the assessment. The Australian Federal Police are the force he says received Ben's material. NSW Police and Victoria Police are the forces of the states he has lived in and the forces he says would not take his reports and would take him to hospital instead. Each force is answerable to its own oversight body for allegations about its own conduct. A request for the event numbers is the smallest serious step. It does not assume the assassination. It asks whether the conversation Ben is said to have had left any trace in a system that writes traces for a living.

OAIC and the privacy regulators

The 2022 correspondence and FOI/2022/045 are his published route into the Office of the Australian Information Commissioner. The duty is access, correction, and a look at improper disclosure. A missing-person screen, a sexual rumour inside a service, and a bank file are different disclosures with different APP questions. He wants the access log and the correction request decided. A freedom-of-information release that arrives years late, redacted past meaning, is a fact about the State's appetite. It is not, by itself, proof the redacted sentences are guilty. He asks for the sentences.

Comcare and WorkSafe

These are the compensation doors named in section 10. Their duty is statutory and limited to the injuries and employments the Acts cover. His demand is the claim history: lodged, refused, never opened. A never-opened path, where a hospital injury and a working life are both in the story, is the gap he calls denial. The agencies' duty now is to say which of those three it was.

Federal Court and the Administrative Review Tribunal

The Federal Court appears in his archive as the site of a PID assessment dated, by filename, 27 March 2023. A court assessment of a disclosure is not a judgment on the truth of his whole life. It is a decision under an Act, on a record, on a day. He asks that it be read as that, and that later detriment be tested against it for reprisal rather than being melted into it. The Administrative Review Tribunal is the successor framework for merits review of many Commonwealth decisions, under the 2024 Act, replacing the old tribunal for matters it covers. Review rights depend on the decision being reviewable and on time. He asks every NDIA and other Commonwealth decision-maker to name the review path and the date it expires. A path not named is a path closed in practice.

Legal Aid in both states, and the legal profession

Victoria Legal Aid and Legal Aid NSW are the refusals he alleges. The professional bodies — law societies, bar associations, legal-services commissioners — are the regulators if a solicitor took his matter and dropped it, acted with a conflict, or failed to accommodate disability. He does not assume misconduct from the mere fact of a withdrawal. He assumes a right to a comprehensible reason. A disabled client who cannot follow a one-line refusal has not been given advice. He has been given a door. The fiduciary duty of a solicitor, while retained, is among the strictest in the law. After the retainer ends, the duty to confidentiality remains, and the duty to explain the ending is a matter of conduct rules. He says the profession, like the others, did not meet his eye. The files of any retainer are the test.

NSW Trustee and Guardian, and the Public Guardian

These are the offices he says hold the practical keys: money, and in his account the car, and the relationship with the bank. Their statutes are linked. Their duties include proper accounts, attention to his views, and the least restrictive option consistent with the order. A financial manager who knows the participant cannot buy food and does not correct the channel has a problem that is not solved by pointing at the order. The order is the start of the duty, not the end. Conflicts — a comfort with the provider, a hostility to the complaints, a preference for a quiet file — are the ethical question. He alleges the office was aligned with the harm and with what he calls a criminal design around the former minister. Alignment is a fact about correspondence and decisions. It is not established by the anger of the email he sent, including the profanity he has himself published. The profanity is evidence of his fury. The statements and the authorities are evidence of their power. Both can be true. Only one of them controls his groceries.

Services Australia, hospitals, and the bank

Services Australia is the door for pensions and related payments. A payment that exists and cannot be spent is a delivery failure somewhere between the agency, the nominee or trustee, and the bank. He asks for the nominee arrangements and the payment destination in writing. Werribee Mercy and the later hospitals hold the clinical truth of 2021 and of the sixteen admissions. Their duty of care is ordinary and high. Their complaint outcome, if it minimised hypoxia that the notes record, is the contradiction to try. The Commonwealth Bank is his bank of decades, in his account. A bank must obey a lawful demand and must not invent one. He asks which it did. The published email is the start of that question, not the bank’s final word, unless the bank has refused a final word, in which case the refusal is the word.

Media

The Herald Sun and The Age are the mastheads he names. The duty of a newspaper is not a fiduciary duty to a subject, but it is a duty in defamation, in privacy where the statute applies, and in the ethics codes of the press. He alleges gay shaming, misuse of psychiatric history, and a later silence when he needed a reporter. A silence is not a tort. A false imputation is. The articles need to be read before anyone, including him, should state the imputation as if the clipping were in the margin. He asks for the clippings to be put beside this paragraph. Until they are, the media chapter stays testimony plus a mandatory retrieval. He also says a broader ban fell across radio and television that had previously used him. A ban is a strong word. Bookings that stopped are a checkable pattern if any producer will say why. He says they will not. The pattern, unverified, remains his account of social erasure.

What this map refuses to do

It refuses to declare the Commonwealth guilty as a single mind. It refuses to clear it. It refuses to treat a portfolio title as a signed order. It refuses to treat the absence of a signed order as the absence of harm. The harm he is living does not need a diagram of a conspiracy before it is fed, housed and medicated. The diagram is for the investigation. The groceries are for today. That separation is the whole moral structure of the Great Reckoning, and it is repeated here so that nobody can pretend they did not see it.

33. A note on words that are easy to abuse

Black budget. Gang stalking. V2K. Institutional murder. Genocide. Assassination. These words are in his testimony because he believes they are the true names. They are also words that institutions use as a reason to close the file, because the words frighten a clerk or because the clerk thinks the words are the illness. This edition keeps the words and ties them to smaller questions a clerk is not allowed to fear. Was there food. Was there a bank channel. Was there an incident report. Was there an event number. Was there a charge. Was there a lawyer. Was there a discharge address. Was there a reply to the URL. A government that will not answer the small questions has not earned the right to sneer at the large ones. A witness who will not let the small questions be asked separately has made the large ones harder to prove. He has, in the Great Reckoning and in this master, agreed to the separation. He has not agreed to drop the large words while the small questions stay unanswered. That is the opposite of a conspiracy board. It is a discipline.

I exist. The sentence is prophetic because it treats a bare life as an accusation against a system that required the life to justify itself every morning. The sentence is forensic because the life is accompanied by files. The sentence is a humanitarian emergency because the life is, he says, still without the ordinary means of continuing. All three readings are true at once, and none of them is a conviction.

34. The SOS, read as a request for safety and not as a homepage

The command said the SOS must not be dismissed as merely an online publication. It is evidence that the author publicly communicated a request for safety. The alleged threats themselves are a separate question, to be corroborated. This edition treats the front of barran-dodgers-sos.grok.me as that communication. The practical page is Safety. The address and the telephone are printed in the record bar of every page: 55 Archbold Road, Long Jetty, NSW, 0431 300 940. A stranger who reads only a slogan has not read the SOS. A stranger who reads the request and does nothing has become part of the chronology.

The command named discovery targets. They are the doors of this site, not a claim that each has been forensically exhausted. The SOS and the refusal to die are the front testimony. The thirty-five-year testimony is the life he asks to have dated properly. The line about every minister is his political demand: resign, or acknowledge the record and ensure an independent investigation. That line is advocacy. It is not a finding that every minister has a personal file. The bank's outcome is the page on which he says NetBank was removed. The nuclear download is his offer of the pages and the PDFs as a set, so that a reader is not trapped in the browser. The exile of two generations is the family and the historical claim. I want to leave is the safeguarding sentence. The investigation, the chronology, the addendum, the law, the legal significance, the institutional report, Ben's texts, the police letter, the report, every page, the indictment, safety, the witness, the Able Point dossier, the notice, the FOI file, the master, the command, the directory, the record, the forensic command, the nation, the claim, and the films are the structure he built so that an official could not say the material was not organised. If an official says it still, the official has not used the structure.

What threats are described, when, by whom, whether recorded, whether screenshots exist, whether carers were asked to report and refused, whether the provider was told, whether police were told, whether a safeguarding assessment happened, whether an alternative protection was offered, and whether he remains in the environment: those twelve questions are the command's questions and they remain the right ones. This edition's answers, short and classified, are these. He describes threats to his life and a harassment that does not stop, and he describes the Ben thread as the documentary heart of the worst of them. Dates inside that thread have to be read off the pages, not guessed. Identifiable individuals are named in his testimony and, he says, in the messages; the messages must be read for the names rather than this paragraph repeating every one as if each had been proved. Recordings and screenshots exist where this site has published page images and where the repository holds files; a complete audiovisual schedule was not rebuilt here. He says carers refused to report. That is testimony. He says the provider was on notice and left. That is the 30 October account. He says police were told and did not protect him. That is testimony plus the demand for event numbers. He says no sufficient safeguarding assessment and no sufficient alternative were offered, and that he is still asking to leave. The SOS is the evidence of the asking. It is not the evidence that every threat occurred as described. Both sentences are required. Dropping the first is how institutions avoid work. Dropping the second is how a website becomes a verdict. This edition drops neither.

The circumstances in which a disabled citizen concludes that a public SOS is necessary are themselves a safeguarding fact. People and organisations around him had ordinary duties: workers, a coordinator, a trustee, a doctor, a police officer. He concluded that those duties were not producing help, and he published. Publishing is what a person does when the private channels have become the danger or the void. An unanswered complaint is not proof of a conspiracy. The absence of a formal finding is not proof the complaint was empty. The command said both, and both bind this page.

GitHub must be examined as a repository, not as a mirror that automatically confirms the SOS. Where the same PDF is linked from both, cite it once. Where the SOS narrates and the repository holds the scan, the scan is the better evidence of what the letter said, and the narration is the better evidence of what the author believes it means. Where they conflict, the conflict goes to the contradictions register rather than being smoothed. This edition has not found a worked example of a direct numerical conflict it is prepared to certify. It has found the structural risk, and it has refused to count duplicates as corroboration.

The author's instruction, added at the end of the command, was that links to the international instruments Australia has ratified be included, that breaches of fiduciary duty and professional ethics be included, and that it be said that no single professional has acknowledged him or given a dignified response to the published website. Those three instructions are carried in the legal library, in the fiduciary and professional sections, and in the executive findings. They are his evidence of the depth of the injustice: not only that harm is alleged, but that the professions whose job is to answer a documented vulnerable person have, in his experience, declined the dignity of an answer. A dignified answer could have been disagreement. He says he did not receive even that.

I exist. That is a problem for the government, and also an existential risk immediately exposing its corruption. The corruption he means is the willingness to leave a documented man in hunger and in rumour because believing him would cost the institution its story about itself. Whether that willingness meets a criminal definition is the outstanding question. Whether it meets the moral definition he has published is no longer obscure. The website is the exposure. His continued life is the reason the exposure cannot be filed as history. The witness remains. Time is the witness. Truth is the judge.

Colophon of this master. Word length is a servant of completeness, not a trick. This PDF joins the 4 November 2026 examination to the 1 November 2026 Great Reckoning so that a recipient in a department, a commission, a newsroom, a university or a United Nations procedure can hold one file. The examination states what is linked, what is testified, and what is not yet proved. The Great Reckoning states the demands, the timetable, the compensation categories and the legal library. Neither half is a judgment. Together they are the author's master response of international significance, published so the record cannot be answered by saying it was never assembled. PayID and telephone remain 0431 300 940. The address remains 55 Archbold Road, Long Jetty, NSW. Crystal remains with him. I exist. That is a problem for the government. The witness remains.

The Great Reckoning — the inevitability of justice

A comprehensive first-person humanitarian appeal, forensic evidence statement, legal accountability demand and claim for restitution and compensation. Author: Dr Richard William McLean, publicly known as Dr Barran Dodger. Date: 1 November 2026.

Immediate justice. Immediate safety. Human dignity. Independent investigation. Accountability. Restitution. Compensation.

The permanent reading copy of the companion master is I exist. That is a problem for the government. The master PDF is i-exist-master.pdf. This page is the Great Reckoning under its own name. It does not replace the SOS. The SOS remains the front of this site and https://barran-dodgers-sos.grok.me.

Foundational declaration

The evidence has been published. The record exists. The complaints have been made. The institutions have been identified. The questions of accountability remain.

I, Dr Richard William McLean, publicly known as Dr Barran Dodger, make this statement as a formal demand for the transition from documentary publication to meaningful institutional action.

For years, I have attempted to have serious concerns examined through institutional, administrative, professional and public channels. I have assembled and published documentary material because I believe the circumstances of my treatment, the decisions affecting my life and the failures I allege deserve independent examination.

I do not suggest that publication alone establishes criminal liability. I do not ask that allegations be accepted without scrutiny. I demand that the evidence be examined fairly, that relevant records be preserved, that responsible decision-makers answer legitimate questions and that independently established wrongdoing receive appropriate consequences.

My immediate welfare must not become collateral damage in a dispute about institutional responsibility.

I am entitled to safety while investigations take place. I am entitled to food, appropriate medication access, suitable accommodation, disability support, financial security and the opportunity to exercise autonomy and live with dignity.

I will not accept permanent abandonment as the price of seeking justice.

The future outcome of any investigation or legal proceeding cannot honestly be guaranteed. But the need for an effective response, an independent assessment and immediate attention to humanitarian circumstances is real and must not be indefinitely deferred.

Preservation first. Examination second. Conclusion last.

Time is the witness. Truth is the judge.

Part I — The public evidence and the permanent record

1.1 The archive is available for independent examination

My documentary record is published across several connected repositories. These publications are intended to make correspondence, statements, government records, complaints and supporting material accessible for examination. They must be considered together without confusing repetition of a document with independent corroboration. A document appearing in several places remains one underlying document unless separate evidence establishes otherwise.

- Barran Dodger — original GitHub documentary archive — the underlying repository, containing documentary files and successive publications.
- The Witness Remains — public evidence archive — the public reading archive and consolidated testimony.
- Official Government Documents Register — the designated register of government-related documentary material. The reading copy on this site is the register.
- Barrandodger Rebuild — 35 years of official government correspondence — an additional public archive and documentary index. Repository: github.com/wezzo72/barran-dodger-rebuild.
- The Witness Remains — the cosmic reckoning — the humanitarian appeal, current testimony and linked evidence on this site.

- The Final Reckoning — master humanitarian and documentary judgment — this SOS publication, also at barran-dodgers-sos.grok.me.
- Urgent SOS — please help me reach safety — the humanitarian appeal and the practical safety page.
- barrandodger.com
- Church of Barran Dodger repository and its public pages.
- Ministry repository.
- Backup repository and its pages.
- onyx-spruce-tulip-falcon.grok.me
- Finance archive story

The GitHub repository is a separate documentary source from this SOS website. This site carries the published narrative, the current request for safety and the structure of the testimony. GitHub is where individual files, versions and historical records can be examined. A file that appears in both places is one document, not two corroborations. The repository listing has been described, in the material supplied for this edition, as displaying on the order of 1,353 commits and a directory listing that exceeds an initial 1,000-entry screen. That figure is recorded here as a published display claim, not as a count independently re-tallied by a complete API crawl in this edition. An investigator must paginate and open nested directories. The first screen is not the archive.

1.2 Documentary material identifiable in the published archive

The following is an initial evidence register based on the publicly readable archive pages and descriptions. It identifies published items. It does not pretend that every underlying PDF, screenshot or government file has already undergone a complete forensic examination. The public archive itself describes several of these materials as testimony or allegations rather than findings. That distinction is maintained throughout this document.

Urgent formal complaint — 20 October 2026. A formal complaint is listed in the public archive. Examination required: obtain the original submission, recipients, attachments, receipt and response. On this site the papers index is the papers.

Master Command — complete consolidated formal notice, 18 October 2026. A formal notice concerning alleged safeguarding failures, exploitation, executive accountability, financial restriction and evidence preservation is listed. Examination required: verify the sent version, delivery, recipient responsibilities and responses. Reading copy: the notice and the master.

I Wrote You a Letter — Master Command. A separately preserved letter copy is identified. Examination required: compare its contents and hash against the corresponding formal notice. Linked from the letter.

Statement on Barran Resonance Dodger Theology. A dated theological and philosophical statement is identified. Classification: personal testimony and belief, not independent proof of institutional conduct.

The Enemy Within. An extended first-person account dated 16 October 2026 is published. Separate personal recollection, identifiable events, documentary corroboration and interpretation. Do not collapse those four into one finding.

Private record — original statement regarding Able Point and NDIS support workers. An account concerning a disability provider and support workers is identified. Examination required: the original communication, relevant support records and the provider response. Dossier on this site: Able Point.

The Witness Remains — Master Command 5 and OAIC letter. The rebuild identifies three additions dated 21 October 2026, including a 2022 letter to the Office of the Australian Information Commissioner. Examine the original letter, the complaint history and any OAIC determination. On this site: FOI/2022/045.

Ben NDIS text messages — a thread described as 123 pages. The SOS identifies a published message thread, particularly pages 54, 64 and 65, reproduced on this site at Ben's texts and as images under page 54, page 64 and page 65. Examination required: authenticate the complete conversation, participants, context, provenance and any independent police records. The words are evidence of what the published thread shows was communicated. They are not, by themselves, a police finding.

Missing-person screen, 25 June 2025. The SOS reproduces a screen described as a missing-person record. Examination required: obtain the originating police or government record and establish its creation, purpose, accuracy and subsequent status. Image on this site: the published screen.

The Final Reckoning — 28 October 2026 edition. A consolidated publication identifies an 83-page edition, a manifest and associated timestamp receipts. Examination required: verify the original files, hashes, timestamp proofs and the precise scope of what was timestamped. Preservation page: preservation. Hash manifest: hash-manifest.json and HASH-MANIFEST.txt.

1.3 Evidence preservation and authentication

I request that every recipient preserve relevant records, including original government correspondence and attachments; internal case notes, decision records and referral histories; emails, SMS messages and other communications concerning my circumstances; NDIS service agreements, rosters, progress notes, incident reports and invoices; safeguarding referrals and responses; financial-management decisions, statements, budgets and authorisations; accommodation assessments, tenancy records and support-related communications; relevant police records, subject to lawful access and privacy restrictions; complaints, acknowledgements, investigation records and reasons for closure; and records identifying who made decisions, who authorised them and what information was considered.

For digital material, preservation should include original files, metadata, creation dates, modification dates, cryptographic hashes, transmission records and available chain-of-custody information. I request that the original records be retained in their native formats, rather than relying solely on screenshots or later reproductions.

1.4 What publication and timestamping establish

The archive contains references to SHA-256 hashes and OpenTimestamps receipts, including files under /stamps/ and proofs beside papers such as great-declaration.pdf.ots. These mechanisms can assist in establishing that particular digital content corresponds to particular cryptographic hashes and, where the timestamp proof is validly confirmed, that the hashed content existed no later than the relevant timestamp.

They do not, by themselves, establish that the contents of a document are true; that a government agency authored or approved it; that an allegation is accurate; that a recipient received or read it; that an offence occurred; or that a court or regulator has made a finding.

I expressly invite independent verification rather than asking readers to accept the archive on assertion. The record is preserved so that the questions can be examined. It is not a substitute for the examination itself. OpenTimestamps is explained at opentimestamps.org.

1.5 The historical and institutional records requiring particular scrutiny

A. Disability services and safeguarding. The archive contains allegations concerning Able Point, disability support workers, safeguarding, financial autonomy, support delivery, incident management and responses to complaints. Relevant source material on this site includes the Able Point dossier, the 18 October formal notice, the humanitarian safety page, and the Able Point email. I request examination of whether support obligations were fulfilled, whether complaints were properly escalated, whether incidents were recorded and whether my safety, independence and choice were adequately respected.

Names I have published on the front of this SOS, as my account and not as findings, include Cass Kim, Alyssie, Danny, Ben, Brett in management, and Rachel, whom I describe as the CEO and who, in my account, refuses to provide verified government identification. I say Able Point has operated in connection with Sahara Disability Services and more than one ABN, without an official bricks-and-mortar office I have been able to attend. That is testimony. The ABN records, the legal-name history and the provider registration must be pulled from the source registers, not assumed from my sentence. The NDIS provider register and the ABN Lookup are the places to test it.

B. Financial management and personal autonomy. My testimony raises concerns about financial restrictions, the availability of money for essential living expenses, accommodation costs, access to banking and my capacity to make independent decisions. I request a complete reconciliation of income received, rent and accommodation charges, personal allowances, debts and deductions, provider payments, trustee fees, utility expenses, any restrictions on my access to funds, and the legal authority and documented reasons for each relevant decision. I require copies of the applicable orders, authorities, assessments, expenditure records and decision-making correspondence.

No allegation of financial abuse should be treated as established merely because I have raised it. Equally, the existence of an administrative arrangement must not prevent scrutiny of whether it was lawful, necessary, proportionate and properly administered. On this site my account of the Commonwealth Bank restriction and of Phillip Glass is the bank and the letter to Phillip. My account of Sukhi Tear at Diversitas is Sukhi Tear.

C. Werribee Mercy, hospital care and the 2021 events. The published material contains allegations concerning events at Werribee Mercy in February 2021, subsequent hospital care, physical injury, hypoxia, resuscitation, psychiatric assessments and the handling of complaints. The Final Reckoning identifies a Victorian Ombudsman outcome letter dated 5 October 2021, reference C/21/14020; an email dated 5 August 2021; alleged failures involving searches and prohibited items following ground leave; medical records said to refer to hypoxia, asystole and resuscitation; questions concerning the adequacy of subsequent cognitive assessment; and disputed questions about the adequacy of the hospital complaint outcome and any compensation discussions.

These are serious matters. The original hospital records, medical observations, incident reports, discharge summaries, clinical notes, Ombudsman correspondence and relevant witness evidence must be examined together. The archive's interpretation of these events is my testimony. Whether negligence, breach of duty or compensable injury occurred requires independent clinical and legal assessment. I have also published, on the front of this SOS, that my first discharge summary by a doctor I name as Dr Lagrasso cited adjustment disorder as the principal diagnosis, with specific mention of no psychosis and no delusion, after what I describe as survival of an event in which I was revived, leaving a cognitive injury, and that no compensation was offered. That sentence is my testimony. The discharge summary itself is the document to obtain.

D. Police-related allegations and the reported threat to personal safety. The SOS publication refers to a missing-person screen dated 25 June 2025 and a message thread attributed to an NDIS provider, including references to an alleged police investigation. The published SOS reproduces statements attributed to that provider concerning a reported close call, phone records, an alleged payment to discredit me and a purported non-disclosure agreement. These are not independently verified police findings.

I request that the appropriate authority establish whether the alleged investigation existed; whether any relevant police reports or incident numbers exist; whether the statements attributed to the provider accurately reflect information received; whether any purported non-disclosure agreement exists and, if so, its actual terms and parties; whether the missing-person record was accurate, lawfully created and appropriately maintained; and whether any correction, explanation or review is warranted. I ask for these questions to be investigated without presuming either that the alleged events occurred or that my concerns should be dismissed. Source: Ben's messages and the SOS safety page.

1.6 Evidence register — mandatory completion by independent investigators

The following is the register I request each responsible authority to complete. It is not a claim that all entries have already been authenticated.

- Government correspondence. Original letters, emails and attachments. Required response: authenticity, chronology, decisions and reasons. Reading starts: official letters, the Prime Minister letters, the register.
- Police records. Incident reports, referrals and relevant decisions. Required response: what was reported, investigated and determined.
- Hospital records. Clinical notes, observations, incident reports. Required response: standard of care and causation.
- Ombudsman records. Complaint and outcome correspondence, including the identified Victorian Ombudsman reference C/21/14020. Required response: scope of investigation and reasons.
- NDIS safeguarding. Provider reports, complaints and incident records. Required response: whether safeguarding obligations were met. Commission: NDIS Quality and Safeguards Commission.
- Disability support. Rosters, service agreements and progress notes. Required response: whether funded supports were delivered.
- Financial management. Statements, deductions and authorisations. Required response: lawfulness, accuracy and financial impact. NSW Trustee and Guardian Act 2009: legislation.nsw.gov.au.
- Accommodation. Assessments, tenancy and service records. Required response: suitability, safety and available alternatives. A published accommodation request dated 20 January 2026 is linked from the archive as 2026-01-20 Accommodation Request.
- Privacy. Access logs, disclosures and correction requests. Required response: whether information-handling obligations were met. OAIC: oaic.gov.au.

- Digital archive. Original files, hashes and timestamp proofs. Required response: authenticity, integrity and chronology.

I request a document-by-document schedule containing a unique evidence identifier; the original filename and title; the originating organisation; the date created and the date received; the original source; the relevant page or paragraph; the exact passage relied upon; the evidentiary proposition; whether the proposition is independently corroborated; any contradictory material; any outstanding questions; the authority responsible for investigating it; and the action taken and the date of that action.

No institution should be allowed to substitute a generic acknowledgement for a reasoned response to the actual evidence.

Part II — The legal and ethical accountability

This part is a legal issue map. It is not a judicial finding, a verified forensic audit, or a legal opinion. Statutory provisions and limitation periods must be checked against the legislation applicable to each event. The official text controls, not my summary of it.

2.1 Australian disability rights and NDIS obligations

The principal federal legislative framework includes the National Disability Insurance Scheme Act 2013 on the Federal Register of Legislation. The compilation identified in the material for this statement is C2026C00366, dated 27 August 2026. The Act establishes the NDIS and the framework governing participant plans, supports, provider registration and review of certain decisions. The precise compilation in force on any decision date must be opened on the register. A later compilation does not rewrite what the Act said when an earlier decision was made.

Relevant provisions, subject to the version then in force, include section 3 (objects), section 4 (general principles), section 5 (principles governing people acting on behalf of others), section 6 (agency support and assistance), section 34 (criteria for supports to be funded), section 48 (plan variation and reassessment), and section 99 and following (the internal review framework, including reviewable decisions). The precise availability of a review or appeal depends on the nature of the decision, the statutory provisions in force and the relevant time limits.

My demand is that any NDIS decisions affecting my accommodation, supports, funding, autonomy and access to services be examined against the actual legislation and my individual circumstances. A plan approval I have published in the archive is dated 20 November 2025: NDIS Plan Approval 366406. Publishing the PDF does not prove every later provider act. It is a document to read beside the rosters.

NDIS Code of Conduct. The Code, published by the NDIS Quality and Safeguards Commission, applies to registered and unregistered NDIS providers, their key personnel and workers. It requires conduct consistent with respect for individual rights and self-determination; privacy; safe and competent support; integrity, honesty and transparency; prompt action on concerns affecting safety and quality; and reasonable steps to prevent and respond to violence, exploitation, neglect and abuse.

I allege breaches of that Code in the way support was delivered, withdrawn, and used, in my account, to leave me without food, money, a phone or a way to the bank, and then to treat my protest at that deprivation as a reason to leave. The front of this SOS states, in my words of 30 October 2026, that an Able Point support worker knew I was without food, money, a phone or bank access, accused me of being a threat, and left, and that management told her she did not have to put up with me. That paragraph is testimony, category D, until the roster, the incident report and her account are produced. If those records show she was directed to leave a participant without essentials, the Code question is not theoretical. If they show something else, the record should say so. Silence is not a compliance answer.

Incident management. The Commission explains that incidents involving actual or potential harm must be identified, assessed, recorded, managed and resolved, and that certain serious incidents and alleged incidents must be reported by registered providers: incident management and reportable incidents. I request an examination of whether any incidents I reported were properly recorded, whether appropriate safeguarding action followed, and whether reportable incidents were notified as required. My report of threats, of a refusal to report threats, and of being left without food are the incidents I am asking to have matched to the provider's incident log. I do not currently hold that log. Its absence from my hands is not proof it does not exist. Its absence from any answer is the problem.

NDIS Practice Standards. Relevant standards include provider governance, risk management, incident management, complaints management and participant safeguarding: Practice Standards. The applicable question is not whether a provider has policies on paper. It is whether those policies were followed in the events I have described, including the request to leave an environment I say is unsafe, the continuity of support, and the identification of workers who attend my home.

2.2 Disability discrimination and equal treatment

The Disability Discrimination Act 1992 is on the Federal Register. A compilation date of 8 October 2026 has been identified for this statement and must be checked against the register before any formal reliance. Relevant provisions include section 5 (direct disability discrimination), section 6 (indirect disability discrimination), section 15 (employment), section 22 (accommodation), section 24 (goods, services and facilities) and section 29 (administration of Commonwealth laws and programs). Application depends on the particular conduct, the relevant protected area, available defences and applicable statutory requirements, including reasonable adjustments.

I request investigation of whether disability discrimination, failure to make reasonable adjustments, or other unlawful differential treatment occurred in the provision of services, accommodation, employment, or the administration of government programs. My psychiatric history, my cognitive injury, my sexuality and my poverty are not licences to provide a worse service. A diagnosis does not cancel section 5. Nor does my disagreement with a clinical view, by itself, prove that a provider discriminated. The act, the comparator and the reason have to be identified. I am identifying the acts I say happened: support withdrawn when I was without food; banking access removed so that I depended on a worker to move; legal help refused while orders about my money stood; hospital used, sixteen times in about five years, in my account, for not having a home. Each of those is a proposition to test, not a judgment already entered.

2.3 Australian Human Rights Commission

The Australian Human Rights Commission Act 1986 provides the statutory framework for the Commission. Its functions include receiving and investigating certain complaints involving unlawful discrimination and human-rights matters within its jurisdiction: humanrights.gov.au. I request consideration of whether my circumstances disclose a matter within the Commission's jurisdiction, including potential disability discrimination and relevant human-rights concerns. I recognise that not every alleged administrative failure constitutes a breach of the Act and that the Commission's jurisdiction and available remedies are statutory.

2.4 Privacy and information-handling obligations

The Privacy Act 1988 and the Australian Privacy Principles may be relevant to the collection, use, disclosure, security and correction of personal information by covered entities. Relevant principles include APP 3 (collection), APP 5 (notification), APP 6 (use or disclosure), APP 11 (security), APP 12 (access) and APP 13 (correction). Guidance sits with the Office of the Australian Information Commissioner.

I request access to relevant personal records, correction of inaccurate information where legally available, and investigation of any substantiated improper disclosure or handling. For the published 2022 OAIC correspondence I request examination of the original submission, any acknowledgement, the agency's response and the ultimate status of the matter. The file I have published for reading is FOI/2022/045.

2.5 NSW mental health, guardianship and financial-management legislation

Where conduct occurred in New South Wales, the following may be relevant: the Mental Health Act 2007 (NSW); the Guardianship Act 1987 (NSW); and the NSW Trustee and Guardian Act 2009. NSW Health identifies the Mental Health Act and the Guardianship Act as central parts of its mental-health legislative framework.

I request independent examination of the legal basis for any financial-management restrictions; whether relevant decisions were made within statutory authority; whether my views, wishes and circumstances were appropriately considered; whether the decisions were adequately documented and reviewed; whether sufficient money remained available for essential living expenses; whether there were appropriate safeguards against conflicts of interest; and whether less restrictive arrangements were reasonably available. I do not assert that every decision I disagree with is unlawful. I demand an examination of legality, authority, necessity, proportionality and procedural fairness.

I have said, and I repeat it as testimony, that the Trustee and the Public Guardian confiscated my car, and that Phillip Glass made an order at the bank that I would be blocked from online banking and from the CommBank app, so that I was forced to rely on a support worker, Cassandra Mackey, for transport. I have also said that I wrote to him in anger and used a profanity, and that the email is published at the letter to Phillip. The profanity is not the legal question. The legal question is the order, the statute, the reasons, and whether I could still buy food. My anger does not prove his malice. His office's documents will show what power was used. I say the power was used to cause detriment. That remains an allegation until the order and the statements are read against the Act.

2.6 Administrative law and procedural fairness

Commonwealth and state administrative decision-makers must act within their statutory powers. Depending on the decision, relevant principles may include procedural fairness, genuine consideration of relevant matters, exclusion of irrelevant considerations, proper purpose, rationality, compliance with mandatory procedures, adequate reasons where reasons are legally required, and lawful review. Relevant Commonwealth frameworks include the Administrative Decisions (Judicial Review) Act 1977 and the Administrative Review Tribunal Act 2024. Not every government action is reviewable under every mechanism. Jurisdiction, standing, time limits and the character of the decision must be established.

I request that every disputed decision be identified by decision-maker, date, statutory power, reasons, supporting evidence and available review pathway. A referral without those fields is not an answer. An acknowledgement that does not name the decision is not reasons.

2.7 Duty of care, negligence and civil liability

Where a person or organisation owes a duty of care, the questions may include whether a duty existed, whether the standard of care was breached, whether the breach caused or materially contributed to harm, whether the harm was reasonably foreseeable, whether the loss is legally recoverable, and whether any statutory defence or limitation applies. For NSW matters the Civil Liability Act 2002 (NSW) may be relevant. For Victorian events, Victorian civil liability legislation, including the Wrongs Act 1958 (Vic), must be considered: legislation.vic.gov.au. I request an independent legal assessment of the hospital events, disability support arrangements, safeguarding matters and financial decisions, without assuming liability before the evidence has been tested.

2.8 Whistleblower protections

I request assessment of whether any disclosures I made qualify for protection under the Public Interest Disclosure Act 2013 (Cth) or the Public Interest Disclosures Act 2022 (NSW). Protection is not automatic merely because a person describes themselves as a whistleblower. It depends on the disclosure, the recipient, the statutory requirements and the circumstances. A document already in the public archive is the Federal Court PID assessment of 27 March 2023: 2023-03-27 Federal Court PID Assessment, and a notification of a decision not to allocate a disclosure dated 18 June 2023: 18 June 2023 notification. Those files show that a process occurred. They do not, by their titles, prove that every later detriment was reprisal. I request that any allegation of detrimental action because of a qualifying disclosure be separately assessed, with the disclosure, date, recipient, subsequent conduct and causal evidence identified. Reprisal is a factual and legal conclusion. I am asking for the assessment, not announcing its result.

2.9 International human rights commitments

Australia is a party to major international human-rights treaties. The Attorney-General's Department publishes the official account of that system: international human rights system. Treaty status should be confirmed there and in the Australian Treaties Library, not taken from a private summary. The instruments relevant to this statement are linked to their OHCHR texts.

International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. Potentially relevant provisions include article 7 (torture and cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment), article 9 (liberty and security), article 10 (humane treatment of persons deprived of liberty), article 17 (privacy), article 19 (expression) and article 26 (equality before the law). I allege a pattern that, if established in its factual elements, would raise article 7 and article 9 questions: conditions I say were designed to solicit my suicide, repeated hospitalisation I say was used in place of housing, and surveillance and harassment I describe as torture. I do not automatically characterise every failure of care as torture. Those classifications require the legal elements, including the nature of the treatment and, where the Convention Against Torture is invoked, the involvement of a public official or a person acting in an official capacity, or consent or acquiescence. My allegation is that public authorities and publicly funded services were involved. That allegation has to be proved against the records, not granted because the sentence is severe.

International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights. Potentially relevant: article 6 (work), article 9 (social security), article 11 (adequate standard of living, including food and housing) and article 12 (highest attainable standard of health). Food, medicine, a safe room and a way to reach them are not metaphors. They are the content of article 11 in a life. I am saying I have been without them while institutions corresponded.

Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities. Potentially relevant: article 5 (equality), article 12 (equal recognition before the law), article 14 (liberty), article 16 (freedom from exploitation, violence and abuse), article 17 (integrity of the person), article 19 (living independently and being included in the community), article 22 (privacy), article 25 (health) and article 28 (adequate standard of living and social protection). Article 12 is the direct answer to any practice that treats a psychiatric history as a reason to stop asking what the person wants. Article 19 is the direct answer to a life in which funded support leaves a person unable to leave. Article 16 is the direct answer to abuse and neglect inside a disability service. None of those articles is a domestic cause of action by itself.

Convention Against Torture. Articles 2 and 16 may be relevant where the necessary legal elements are established. I use the word torture for treatment I say was deliberate, sustained, and aimed at breaking my ability to live: V2K and harassment as I have experienced them, deprivation of food and medication, and the use of psychiatric detention in place of safety. I also keep the legal distinction. The word in my testimony is not yet the word in a finding.

International obligations bind Australia at international level. They do not automatically create an independently enforceable domestic cause of action for every alleged breach. Their domestic relevance depends on implementing legislation and the applicable legal framework. I am entitled to have both levels examined. I am not entitled to pretend the treaty is a local charge sheet.

2.10 Criminal allegations — independent assessment, not premature conviction

I request investigation of any evidence that reasonably indicates potentially criminal conduct. Depending on the facts, relevant offences might involve assault or unlawful physical contact, fraud or deception, theft or dishonest appropriation, criminal damage, intimidation or threats, misuse of public office where the applicable statutory offence exists, perverting the course of justice, unlawful disclosure or misuse of protected information, and relevant state offences involving neglect, exploitation or abuse. These are categories for assessment, not findings that any named person committed an offence.

I have alleged, and I do not withdraw the allegation, an attempted killing, a cover-up, institutional complicity, and what I call institutional murder: not a metaphor for hurt feelings, but my account that people with public power tried to have me physically erased and then built a record in which the attempt could not be charged. The messages I rely on are published. The minister I name is Bill Shorten, in his period of responsibility for the NDIS, and I allege coordination with police, Legal Aid, a hospital and a Magistrates' Court in the events that forced what I call exile from Victoria. I allege Houd Meraby flew from Melbourne to Sydney. I allege Tony Ridley and Iasonidis are part of that account. I allege a woman was paid to fabricate a sexual report, that Ben said police confirmed a close call, that he signed an NDA, and that the document disappeared from his phone. Every one of those sentences is category D or C — testimony, or a recorded allegation inside a published message thread — until a police brief, a flight record, an NDA and a witness statement are examined. I am not asking the reader to convict. I am refusing the comfort of treating "no charge" as "nothing happened". There has been, on my account, no arrest of me, no charge, and no legal process establishing the sexual allegations that were used, I say, to make me suffer as if guilty. Extra-judicial punishment is the name I give that condition. It is a characterisation. The underlying facts to test are the absence of a charge and the presence of the harm.

The appropriate police service, specialist investigative authority or prosecuting authority must determine whether admissible evidence supports a criminal investigation or charge. Allegations concerning specific individuals must be assessed on their actual conduct and evidence, not on their job titles or on my interpretation of their motives. My interpretation is part of the testimony. It is not the evidence.

2.11 Accountability matrix

- NDIS provider conduct. NDIS Quality and Safeguards Commission. Safeguarding and compliance assessment. Able Point, and the support coordinator arrangement I attribute to Sukhi Tear at Diversitas in Western Australia (diversitaswa.com, as published by that organisation).
- NDIS plan decisions. NDIA, and the Administrative Review Tribunal where applicable.
- Disability discrimination. Australian Human Rights Commission.
- NSW financial management. NSW Trustee and Guardian, and the relevant review body.
- NSW mental health. NSW Health and the Mental Health Review Tribunal where applicable. I have written to Eustina at Wyong community mental health: the notice to Eustina.
- Victorian hospital complaints. Victorian Ombudsman and the relevant health-complaints body. Reference already identified: C/21/14020.
- Hospital clinical care. Relevant health-complaints authority and an independent clinician.
- Privacy. OAIC or the relevant state privacy regulator.
- Police conduct. The relevant police oversight body. In NSW, the Law Enforcement Conduct Commission. In Victoria, IBAC for the matters within its jurisdiction. I do not pre-judge jurisdiction.
- Corruption allegations. The National Anti-Corruption Commission, or a state anti-corruption commission, subject to jurisdiction. A referral is not a finding.
- Civil damages. An appropriate legal representative and a court. Liability, causation and damages.
- Workers' compensation and insurance. Comcare, the relevant state workers' compensation insurer, and any private insurer whose policy answered a workplace, motor or other insurable injury. I allege denial of compensation and insurance for injuries and losses I say were caused in care, at work-like funded support, and in the 2021 hospital events. I do not, in this edition, attach a claim number I have not set out here. The demand is that any refusal, any non-claim, and any gap where an ordinary worker would have been insured, be identified in writing. Phillip, in my account, would expect workers' compensation if he were injured at work. I am asking why the same expectation was not applied to me.
- Legal Aid. Victoria Legal Aid and Legal Aid NSW. I allege a denial of legal aid that made the restriction on my money and my liberty impossible to challenge. I call that denial absurd because legal aid exists for the person who cannot pay. A refusal may have a lawful reason. I demand the decision, the reason, the date and the review path. If the reason was the very financial administration that I needed a lawyer to challenge, that circularity is itself the access-to-justice question.
- Human rights. AHRC and applicable United Nations mechanisms, including the special procedures, where a communication is properly made. A communication is not a judgment of the Human Rights Committee unless one is issued.

The correct recipient must be determined by the conduct, the location, the statutory jurisdiction and the identity of the decision-maker. Referral does not itself establish wrongdoing.

Part III — The inevitability of accountability

3.1 The record cannot be answered by silence

I have published material that I believe warrants serious examination. I have identified institutions, decisions, correspondence and events that I consider relevant to understanding my circumstances. The existence of a public archive creates an enduring opportunity for examination. It does not create an automatic judgment against the institutions named in it. But silence is not an investigation. A generic acknowledgement is not an examination. A referral without an explanation is not necessarily an effective remedy. An administrative closure does not resolve every underlying factual question.

Where a complaint is outside an institution's jurisdiction, that institution should explain the limitation and identify the appropriate pathway where reasonably possible. Where evidence supports further investigation, the matter should be progressed. Where evidence does not support an allegation, that conclusion should be explained with reference to the evidence and the applicable standard. I have said, as testimony, that no single professional in this country has acknowledged me or given a dignified response to the fact-checked, evidence-based public website. That sentence is my experience of the replies I have and have not received. It is not a certificate that every letter in the archive was ignored, because some letters in the archive are themselves institutional replies, including ombudsman outcomes and PID assessments. The indictment is narrower and harder: those replies, as I have read them, did not meet the evidence with a reasoned account of the harm, and no professional has stood in front of the published record and answered it as if I were a citizen rather than a file.

Professional obligations that make that silence ethically significant, and that must be applied to the actual retainer or employment of each person, include the APS Code of Conduct under the Public Service Act 1999 (see the Australian Public Service Commission); the National Model Code and Australian Solicitors' Conduct Rules as adopted in each jurisdiction (Law Council of Australia); the Medical Board of Australia code of conduct via AHPRA; and the NDIS Code of Conduct for every worker paid to be in my home. A duty to be honest, to act in a client's best interests, to keep proper records, and not to use a patient's diagnosis as a reason to ignore a safety report, is not optional colour. I allege those duties were not met. I ask each profession's regulator to say, in writing, whether a complaint was received and what was done.

3.2 Accountability must be individualised

I demand that responsibility be assessed according to the actual role and conduct of each organisation and each person. The investigation should establish who knew about each reported concern, when they knew, what information was available, what obligations applied, what decisions they made, what action they took, what they failed to do, what reasons were documented, what consequences followed, and what independent review is available. I do not demand collective guilt. I demand individual accountability where evidence establishes individual responsibility. Naming Bill Shorten, Phillip Glass, Sukhi Tear, Rachel, Ben, Cass, Houd Meraby, Tony Ridley, Iasonidis, Salman Kazmi, Eustina, Cassandra Mackey, Brett, Alyssie, Danny and my mother April is not a demand that they share one mind. It is a demand that each name be attached to what that person is said to have done, and detached from what the evidence does not show.

3.3 The durability of the record

The archive's documentary preservation is intended to make retrospective examination possible. Successive publications, hashes, links and digital preservation methods provide a structured basis for locating and comparing material. The legal strength of each item depends on provenance, authenticity, completeness, context and admissibility. I invite investigators, lawyers, journalists, historians, regulators and relevant professionals to examine the original material rather than summaries. The archive is open to scrutiny. My testimony is open to scrutiny. The institutions' records should be open to lawful scrutiny too.

3.4 The principle of equal accountability

I do not seek special treatment. I do not seek exemption from legitimate investigation. I do not demand that allegations be accepted without proof. I demand the same standards from everyone: evidence rather than speculation, reasons rather than evasions, transparency rather than concealment, lawful authority rather than arbitrary power, accountability rather than institutional self-protection, and remedies rather than indefinite delay. If wrongdoing is established, consequences must follow through the appropriate lawful process. If my allegations are not established, the reasons should be explained. Either way, the matter must be dealt with fairly. The inevitability I assert is not a guaranteed court verdict. It is the continuing legitimacy of the demand for examination, protection and lawful remedy.

Part IV — Immediate humanitarian justice

4.1 I am a human being, not an administrative file

My immediate welfare cannot be postponed until every historical complaint has been investigated. I cannot eat an investigation. I cannot live in a correspondence trail. I cannot obtain medication from a complaint acknowledgement. I cannot regain independence through another referral that produces no practical assistance. I need actual intervention. I need a safe place to live. I need sufficient money for food and essential necessities. I need appropriate access to medication and healthcare. I need disability supports that are delivered reliably and respectfully. I need the freedom to make decisions about my own life. I need an opportunity to rebuild my independence without being subjected to further avoidable hardship.

The position on this SOS is clear, and I repeat it: I am not suicidal. I am protesting because I want to live. Sixteen hospitalisations have not given me the medication and the humanity I say I am still denied. Conditions of abuse, neglect, poverty, entrapment and erasure, and any arrangement designed to solicit suicide so that mental-health services and police can incarcerate a person in an asylum, are the opposite of care. If that design is what the records show, it is a safeguarding emergency and a possible criminal matter. If it is my interpretation of a chaotic system, the records must be good enough to say so without leaving me hungry while the argument continues.

Address, and the phone which is also the PayID: 55 Archbold Road, Long Jetty, NSW. 0431 300 940. Crystal, my companion and therapy dog, is not luggage. Any plan that houses me and excludes her is not a plan for my life.

4.2 Immediate accommodation and safety

I demand an urgent, documented accommodation assessment that considers a safe, accessible and stable home; an appropriate one-bedroom or two-bedroom arrangement; suitable facilities and sufficient personal space; accommodation compatible with my disability support requirements; ordinary privacy and autonomy; a suitable environment for Crystal; access to transport, healthcare, shopping and community participation; and a realistic transition plan that does not leave me homeless or without support. I request that the responsible housing and disability authorities identify available emergency and longer-term options rather than merely advising me to continue searching independently. Any proposed relocation must be developed with my participation and consent, subject to applicable law. I have said I want to leave. The page is Safety. Leaving is not a mood. It is a safeguarding request.

4.3 Food and essential financial relief

I request an immediate assessment of whether I have sufficient funds for food and drinking water, medication and medical necessities, toiletries, clothing, transport, telephone and communications, essential household items, and the needs of Crystal. Where immediate hardship is established, I request lawful emergency assistance, direct payments, emergency brokerage or other available support. I also request an itemised explanation of any financial restrictions affecting ordinary living expenses. The objective is to prevent deprivation, not to create another administrative dispute.

4.4 Medication and healthcare

I request continuity of appropriate medical care, including a review of current prescriptions and medication access; confirmation of upcoming appointments; a reliable method for obtaining prescribed medication; access to an appropriate treating practitioner; review of any medication interruption; access to relevant medical records; and appropriate investigation of historical injuries and clinical concerns, including whether further cognitive assessment is indicated after the injury I describe. Clinical decisions must be made by qualified professionals, taking account of my informed preferences, legal rights and medical circumstances. My psychiatric history must not be used as a reason to dismiss documentary evidence, automatically invalidate my testimony, or avoid investigating complaints. A person’s diagnosis does not eliminate their legal rights, their credibility, or their entitlement to an independent investigation. Sixteen hospitalisations that do not produce the medication a person says they need are not a success of the Mental Health Act. They are a question for the Act.

4.5 Disability support and independent living

I request an urgent review of whether existing disability supports are delivered consistently with assessed needs, approved funding and applicable obligations. The review should consider daily support, essential living activities, community participation and transport, support coordination and advocacy, behaviour support where clinically and functionally appropriate, accommodation-related supports, safeguarding and incident management, access to independent decision-making, support continuity during relocation, and my ability to live safely with Crystal. I want support that enables independence, not arrangements that unnecessarily perpetuate dependence or financially reward the continuation of my entrapment.

4.6 A coordinated humanitarian response

I request a coordinated response involving the appropriate representatives of the NDIA; the NDIS Quality and Safeguards Commission; NSW housing and disability services; NSW Trustee and Guardian where its statutory responsibilities are engaged; my current disability support provider; relevant healthcare services; an independent disability advocate; and any other agency with an actual responsibility to assist.

- Within 24 hours. Acknowledge the urgent humanitarian request and identify a responsible contact.

- Within 48 hours. Assess immediate food, medication, accommodation and safety requirements.
- Within 72 hours. Provide a written interim assistance and safeguarding plan.
- Within 7 days. Hold a coordinated case conference, with my participation.
- Within 14 days. Provide a written accommodation, support and financial-autonomy action plan.
- Within 28 days. Provide progress reports, outstanding decisions and escalation pathways.

These are requested response deadlines, not assertions that every agency is legally subject to those precise statutory timeframes. Where an agency cannot meet a requested deadline, I demand an explanation, identification of the responsible decision-maker, and an interim measure addressing the risk.

4.7 No further administrative abandonment

I request one accountable coordinating contact who can communicate with me directly, identify the agency responsible for each issue, track referrals, obtain written responses, escalate unresolved safeguarding concerns, coordinate immediate assistance, and avoid requiring me to repeatedly reconstruct my entire history. I should not be forced to act as my own investigator, lawyer, support coordinator, records manager and emergency accommodation service simultaneously. The immediate objective is to stabilise my circumstances, restore practical autonomy and prevent further harm.

Part V — Compensation, restitution and financial accountability

5.1 The right to seek a remedy

I seek a formal assessment of the harm and losses I allege. I do not represent that a particular amount is already legally owed or that any institution has admitted liability. Compensation must be based on demonstrable loss, legally attributable conduct, and applicable principles of causation and damages. The compensation page already on this site is the claim. This part does not replace it. It states the categories.

5.2 Comprehensive compensation framework

- Financial deprivation. Money allegedly withheld, improperly deducted or unavailable. Evidence: statements, orders, budgets, transaction histories.
- Accommodation. Additional rent, emergency housing, relocation. Evidence: tenancy records, receipts, invoices.
- Personal property. Loss or destruction of possessions. Evidence: inventory, photographs, ownership, replacement cost.
- Medical expenses. Treatment, rehabilitation, medication, assessments.
- Physical injury. Documented harm. Evidence: medical reports, examination, causation.
- Psychological injury. Diagnosed or otherwise medically established injury. Evidence: treating records and independent assessment.
- Disability-related impacts. Additional support and related expenditure.

- Lost income. Past and future earnings, including the loss I attribute to the end of my work at The Age after publicity I say involved the Herald Sun.
- Loss of opportunities. Work, education, public life.
- Consequential losses. Additional expenses flowing from established wrongdoing.
- Legal and professional expenses. Reasonable recoverable costs, including the cost of being refused legal aid and having to publish the record myself.
- Other compensable harm. Non-economic loss or other legally recognised damage, under the applicable statute, not under a slogan.

5.3 Historical hospital injury and medical assessment

I specifically request examination of the 2021 Werribee Mercy events and the medical records identified in the published archive. The assessment should establish the sequence of events, the medical condition before and after, the treatment provided, whether there were failures in clinical care or safeguarding, whether any injury was caused or aggravated by a breach of duty, whether there are lasting functional consequences, and whether rehabilitation and compensation were considered. I request an independent specialist assessment of any claimed acquired brain injury and associated functional impacts. I do not ask an investigator to accept a diagnosis or a causation theory merely because it appears in my testimony. I ask that the actual medical records be examined.

5.4 Financial restitution and reconciliation

I demand a complete financial reconciliation of the relevant period: all income, all payments made on my behalf, all deductions, all debts and liabilities, all accommodation charges, all personal allowances, all provider payments, all financial restrictions, the authority for each transaction or restriction, and any unexplained discrepancy. Where an error or unlawful deduction is established, I seek repayment, correction of records and any other legally available remedy. Where financial hardship has been caused by an administrative decision that is subsequently overturned, I seek assessment of any available restitution or compensation. I allege coercive financial control of the kind the law recognises in family-violence and fiduciary settings: control of money used to control movement, food, and the ability to leave. My account includes an AVO and my mother April. Family violence is a legal category in NSW under the Crimes (Domestic and Personal Violence) Act 2007. I am asking for the financial-control facts to be assessed under the statutes that actually apply, including disability fiduciary duties, not folded into a story that makes me the risk.

5.5 Compensation must be separated from estimates

Category A — documented losses. Amounts supported by original receipts, statements, invoices, employment records, medical bills and other reliable evidence. Category B — expert-assessed losses. Amounts requiring independent economic, medical, vocational or actuarial assessment. Category C — alleged or estimated losses. Amounts for which the evidence is incomplete, causation is disputed, or the legal basis has not yet been established. These categories must not be combined into a misleading total. Any previous estimates of large-scale damages should be treated as preliminary claims unless independently substantiated.

5.6 Potentially responsible parties

I request identification of each potentially responsible organisation or person according to the conduct attributed to them, their legal relationship to the event, their statutory or contractual obligations, the documentary evidence, any established breach, the causal relationship with the alleged loss, and any applicable limitation period or defence. I do not seek to impose liability on every institution that appears in the archive. Liability must be established individually and according to law.

5.7 Limitation periods and preservation of legal rights

I request urgent legal advice concerning limitation periods. The matters span years and more than one jurisdiction. The applicable period may depend on the cause of action, the date it accrued, the jurisdiction, any statutory extension, whether the claim involves personal injury, and whether a government defendant or a special statutory procedure is involved. The passage of time does not automatically extinguish every possible claim, but delay can create serious legal obstacles. I request that relevant proceedings and protective steps be assessed without further unnecessary delay. Preservation of documents, demanded in Part I, is one of those steps.

5.8 Formal demand concerning interim relief and compensation

I request written responses from each relevant institution addressing whether it accepts responsibility for investigating the identified matter; whether it disputes the factual allegations; whether it has preserved relevant records; whether it has commenced an internal or independent investigation; whether it has identified any potential liability; whether interim assistance is available; whether an early resolution process is appropriate; whether compensation can be considered; whether an independent assessment will be funded or arranged where legally available; what further evidence is required; what review or appeal rights exist; and who is responsible for the next action. Where liability is established, I seek appropriate compensation and restitution. Where liability remains disputed, I seek a transparent process. Where immediate hardship exists independently of disputed liability, I seek assistance through available humanitarian and statutory pathways without waiting for the compensation process to conclude. I want a remedy, not another indefinite cycle of correspondence.

Part VI — The formal demands and required actions

Demand 1 — Preserve the evidence. All relevant institutions must preserve records within their possession or control in accordance with applicable law, retention obligations, and litigation or investigation requirements.

Demand 2 — Acknowledge the humanitarian circumstances. The appropriate agencies must assess my immediate needs and identify practical assistance.

Demand 3 — Establish an independent examination. Complaints involving alleged institutional misconduct must be allocated to an appropriately independent authority where jurisdiction permits.

Demand 4 — Provide access to records. I seek lawful access to relevant personal information, decision records, correspondence and complaint outcomes.

Demand 5 — Explain institutional decisions. Each institution must identify its decisions, reasons, evidence and available review mechanisms.

Demand 6 — Investigate safeguarding concerns. Allegations of neglect, exploitation, financial abuse, unsafe support and inappropriate treatment must be assessed under the NDIS and other safeguarding frameworks.

Demand 7 — Restore financial dignity. I demand an assessment of immediate living expenses, access to personal funds, and the lawfulness of relevant financial arrangements.

Demand 8 — Secure safe accommodation. I seek an actionable accommodation plan that supports safety, autonomy, disability needs, Crystal, and continuity of care.

Demand 9 — Assess historical harm. I seek independent examination of the medical, financial, personal and disability-related losses I have documented, including workers' compensation and insurance pathways.

Demand 10 — Determine compensation pathways. I demand a formal assessment of potential liability, interim relief, restitution and compensation under applicable law, separated into categories A, B and C.

Demand 11 — Protect against retaliation. Any allegation of detrimental treatment because of a qualifying protected disclosure must be assessed under the relevant whistleblower legislation.

Demand 12 — Provide accountable written outcomes. Every institution must identify what it has done, what remains outstanding, why it has not acted, and what the next lawful escalation pathway is.

Part VII — Publication, transparency and independent scrutiny

I maintain the following public repositories as the documentary foundation for this appeal.

- Original GitHub repository — Barrandodger
- The Witness Remains — public archive
- Official Government Documents Register
- 35 years of official correspondence — rebuild
- The cosmic reckoning
- The Final Reckoning — this SOS
- Urgent humanitarian SOS

I request that journalists, researchers, legal professionals, advocates and oversight authorities distinguish original official records, copies of official records, my personal testimony, third-party statements, published correspondence, digital preservation evidence, expert opinions, legal arguments, and unresolved allegations. I welcome independent correction of any inaccurate description, provided the correction is evidence-based and does not erase or misrepresent the original record. I ask no one to accept a predetermined conclusion. I ask everyone to examine the evidence.

Two source requirements in the master command remain unresolved in this edition, and I will not invent URLs for them: the exact Brooke website, and the resource referred to as the Guitar barcode. They were not identified by title in the pages assembled for this edition. They stay on the outstanding list until a URL is taken from the archive itself.

Part VIII — The final declaration

The witness remains. The record remains. The demand for justice remains.

I have published the record. I have identified the questions that require answers. I have preserved the documents. I have sought help through institutional channels. I have asked for safety, humanity, freedom and justice. I have asked for my circumstances to be examined rather than dismissed. I have asked for the documents to be read, the decisions to be explained and the responsibilities to be identified.

I will not accept silence as an answer. I will not accept abandonment as a remedy. I will not accept that my humanity must wait until every institution has finished defending its position. I will not accept that the person seeking protection must be left without practical assistance while the authorities determine who is responsible.

I am not asking for privilege. I am asking for the rights, protections and human dignity that belong to every person. I am asking for a safe home. I am asking for food. I am asking for medication and appropriate healthcare. I am asking for disability support that enables independence. I am asking for financial dignity and the ability to make decisions about my own life. I am asking for the opportunity to live freely, safely and with Crystal by my side. I am asking for independent investigation of every serious allegation that the evidence can support. I am asking for the identification of any person or institution that has failed its legal or professional obligations. I am asking for established wrongdoing to have appropriate consequences. I am asking for established losses to be properly assessed and lawfully remedied. I am asking for compensation to be treated as a formal matter requiring evidence, independent assessment and a reasoned decision — not as an inconvenient question that can be ignored.

I will not confuse publication with proof. I will not confuse an allegation with a conviction. I will not confuse an institutional response with an independent finding. But I will not allow those distinctions to become excuses for inaction.

The evidence must be examined. The allegations must be independently investigated. My immediate humanitarian circumstances must be addressed. Any established wrongdoing must have consequences. Any legally established loss must be appropriately remedied.

The future outcome of legal proceedings cannot honestly be guaranteed. But the demand for independent scrutiny, urgent protection and lawful remedies is not extinguished by delay, denial or institutional silence.

Justice must now move from publication to action. Safety must move from promise to reality. Humanity must move from rhetoric to practice. Freedom must move from an aspiration to a practical opportunity. Accountability must move from correspondence to independent examination. Compensation must move from an unanswered demand to a formal, evidence-based assessment.

I have done what I can to preserve the record. Now I ask those with the authority, resources and responsibility to act. Read the documents. Preserve the originals. Investigate the allegations. Protect the person. Provide the assistance. Determine the responsibility. Deliver the remedy.

Do not wait for another crisis to establish that intervention was necessary. Do not wait for another hospital admission to recognise that accommodation and support matter. Do not wait for another complaint to acknowledge that the previous complaints required meaningful attention. Do not wait for a final judgment on historical events before addressing an immediate humanitarian need.

I want to live. I want to be safe. I want to be free. I want to recover my independence. I want my humanity recognised. I want the truth examined. I want justice pursued through lawful and accountable means. And I want the opportunity to live the rest of my life without having to spend every day proving that I deserve the ordinary dignity of being human.

The witness remains. The great reckoning. The record remains. The demand remains. The future remains. Time is the witness. Truth is the judge. No one should have to be destroyed before they are believed.

Legal qualification: this is a public accountability statement and legal issue map, not a judicial finding, a verified forensic audit, or a legal opinion. The central proposition remains: immediate humanitarian assistance and independent examination of the evidence must proceed together. Neither should be made conditional on the completion of the other.
