THE MANIFESTO OF THE UNERASED

Fifty names. One documentary trail. A furious demand for accountability.

An expanded first-person indictment by Barran Resonance Dodger — also known as Dr Barran Dodger and Dr Richard William McLean.

To the Prime Minister, the ministers, the departmental heads, the agency executives, the public officials, the complaint handlers, the decision-makers, the support-provider leadership and every person whose documented actions may have contributed to the circumstances I have described:

I am fucking sick of it.

I am sick of the letters, the forms, the referrals, the procedural explanations, the unanswered questions, the official language and the endless expectation that I should somehow remain composed while trying to make sense of decisions that affect my actual fucking life.
I am sick of being expected to become my own investigator, archivist, legal researcher, records manager, disability advocate and complaint administrator while simultaneously trying to live with the consequences I have described.
I am sick of having to preserve the paperwork that other people and institutions generated, organise it into a chronology, identify the decision-makers, trace the correspondence, reconstruct the chain of authority and then explain to the world why the fucking details matter.
I am sick of having to shout to make the existence of a document count.
I am sick of having to repeat myself.
I am sick of the distance between an institution's official language and the lived reality of the person trying to obtain help from it.
And I am sick of the possibility that an important question can travel through office after office without anybody accepting responsibility for giving a complete answer.
My name is Barran Dodger. I am not a fucking case number. I am not a line in a budget. I am not an administrative inconvenience. I am not an abstraction to be discussed in the third person while I am left to deal with the consequences in the first person.
I have documented my account. I have published records. I have identified decisions and correspondence that I want examined. I have raised questions about disability support, accommodation, government administration, privacy, complaints, oversight and the practical consequences of decisions made by institutions exercising authority over people's lives.
I want those questions answered.
Not with another circular explanation. Not with another response that addresses a peripheral issue while leaving the central issue untouched. Not with an organisational chart that explains which office exists without explaining what that office actually did. I want the evidence examined. I want the decisions traced. I want the people responsible for particular actions identified. I want the reasons placed beside the consequences. And I want the people who occupy positions of authority to understand the anger of a person who says that he has spent years trying to get institutions to confront matters he considers fundamental to his life, safety, dignity and future.

I am not asking for a public-relations exercise.

I am demanding accountability. And I am fucking angry.

My source archive is here:

The following is a substantially expanded accountability statement. It names the people identified in the material available to me, explains the questions I want answered, and expresses the anger behind those questions. It does not pretend that every name has already been matched to a verified finding of personal misconduct. The full registry has not been extracted and checked here, so I will not falsely label an unverified list as the definitive top 50.

That is not me backing away from the demand. It is me insisting that an accountability document be strong enough to survive scrutiny.

PART I — THE PEOPLE AT THE TOP OF THE POLITICAL AND ADMINISTRATIVE PYRAMID

1. Anthony Albanese — Prime Minister

Mr Albanese, I want answers about the government's responsibility for the systems through which people with disabilities seek support, protection and administrative justice.

I am fucking angry that I have had to assemble a documentary record to explain what I say has happened to me. I want the relevant departments to identify which of my matters reached their attention, which were within their authority, and what was done about them.

I do not accept the proposition that a government can be judged only by its announcements and not by the operation of its institutions. A person trying to obtain help needs more than a ministerial statement about inclusion. He needs the actual system to work when his circumstances require it.

I want a documented answer about the issues within the government's responsibility. I want unanswered questions identified and referred to the correct authority. I want explanations that address the facts, not a fucking exercise in political presentation.

My anger is directed at the distance between the promises made about public institutions and the questions I am still trying to have answered. I want the evidence examined, and I want the government to account for what falls within its responsibility.

2. Bill Shorten — former Minister for the NDIS

Mr Shorten was Minister for the NDIS from June 2022 until January 2025.

【turn463945search4】

I want the decisions and administrative arrangements that fell within your ministerial period examined against my chronology.

I am fucking sick of disability being treated as a policy category while an individual participant is left to navigate the consequences of decisions about supports, eligibility, planning and implementation.
I want to know what ministerial oversight could reasonably have addressed, what belonged to the independent statutory agency, and whether any of my specific concerns were brought to your office. I want those questions answered from correspondence and records, not from assumptions about what a minister must have known.
I am not going to pretend that your title proves you personally made a particular decision. But I am not going to accept a title as a shield against legitimate questions about the operation of the portfolio during your tenure, either.
3. Amanda Rishworth — NDIS ministerial responsibility
I want the matters that fell within your period of responsibility examined against the later history of my plan, accommodation requests and concerns about practical implementation.
I want the responsible officials to explain what they could do, what they could not do, and why. If an issue was for the NDIA rather than the minister, I want that distinction stated accurately and the relevant agency decision identified.
I am fucking tired of being pushed into the gaps between policy and implementation. I want the person responsible for each actionable decision identified—not another generic statement about the system's objectives.
4. Anne Aly — disability portfolio involvement
I want any specific role you held in relation to the disability portfolio during the relevant period established from the records.
If a concern was referred to your office, I want to know whether it was received, assessed, forwarded or answered. If no such contact occurred, that should be clear too.
I am angry about unresolved questions, not interested in inventing a chain of communication that the evidence does not establish. The demand is simple: identify the actual record and explain what it means.
5. Katy Gallagher — government services and public administration
I want any relevant government-services responsibility distinguished from the NDIA's own decision-making authority.
If a matter concerning my experience reached an office within your portfolio, the documentary trail should establish what happened next. If it did not, I want that stated rather than having your name treated as proof of personal involvement.
I am fucking tired of administrative responsibility being so difficult to trace. I want the exact office, the exact decision and the exact explanation.
6. The Attorney-General responsible during each relevant period
I want the Attorney-General's Office records examined, including the correspondence identified in my archive and any material relating to legal or public-interest-disclosure issues.

I want the responsible office-holder identified for each date. I want to know whether the matter fell within the Attorney-General's powers, another minister's portfolio or an independent agency's statutory jurisdiction.

I am fucking sick of being left to guess where authority begins and ends. If an office was not responsible, it should identify the right authority and explain the basis for that referral. If a decision was made, I want the reasons and the legal framework.

I want the documentary record to speak clearly enough that nobody has to rely on a guess about who was responsible.

7. Mark Butler — health portfolio

I want any health-related records associated with my circumstances examined on their own evidence, including the identity of the person or body that made each clinical, administrative or service decision.

I am angry about the consequences I have described. I want the relevant institutions to explain what happened, what was recorded and what could have been done differently. But a portfolio title alone does not establish that you personally handled my case. I want any direct connection documented before personal responsibility is alleged.

8. Michelle Rowland — communications portfolio

I want any specific connection between your portfolio, my documented matters and the relevant decisions established from the evidence.

I am not interested in adding a minister's name to a list merely to make the list look more formidable. I want a real document, a real action and a real explanation.

If the evidence establishes no direct involvement, the record should say so. If it establishes involvement, I want the action examined.

9. Andrew Giles — former ministerial office-holder

I want the specific document, referral or decision that connects your office to my account identified before any allegation of personal responsibility is made.

I am furious at the prospect of a citizen having to build a map of government just to find the person who can answer a question. I want that map built from evidence—not speculation.

10. Jenny McAllister — former ministerial office-holder

I want any relevant correspondence or administrative action involving your office identified and explained.

If a record establishes that your office received a matter, I want to know what it did with it. If it establishes no such contact, I want the distinction preserved.

My anger is not a substitute for evidence. It is the reason I am demanding that the evidence be examined properly.

11. The relevant workplace minister

I want employment-related, workplace-relations and compensation matters in my archive examined under the correct legal framework.

I want the responsible statutory body, decision-maker, review mechanism and reasons identified for each matter. I want no confusion between employment administration, privacy, compensation and disability support.

I am fucking sick of having to carry the burden of explaining why these are different questions while trying to get an answer to each of them.

12. The department secretaries and senior officials responsible for the relevant portfolios

I want the names of the actual officials who controlled the relevant processes identified from the records.

A senior title does not automatically establish personal involvement. But where a senior official had responsibility for a decision, a complaint pathway, a records process or a response, that responsibility should be traceable.

I want the institutional chain reconstructed. I want the relevant delegations identified. I want to know who was empowered to act, who actually acted, and who was responsible for making sure the process reached a proper conclusion.

No more fucking organisational fog.

PART II — THE EXECUTIVES, AGENCY LEADERS AND OFFICIALS WHO MUST BE ACCOUNTED FOR

13. Rebecca Falkingham — former NDIA chief executive

I want the correspondence addressed to the NDIA's leadership examined in full. What did I raise? Which issues were within the chief executive's administrative remit? What response was provided? What action was taken by the agency, and what was left for another body?

I am fucking tired of the difference between sending a formal letter and obtaining an answer that actually resolves the issue being treated as unimportant.

I want the record to show what happened after I wrote. If the letter was redirected, identify the destination. If the issues were considered, identify the outcome. If no response exists, that absence needs to be acknowledged.

14. Graeme Head AO — former NDIA leadership

I want the dates of your relevant position and the decisions associated with that period established before attributing personal responsibility.

The question is whether the agency's recorded decisions, administrative processes and responses during the relevant period adequately addressed the matters raised. I want the actual records examined, not a vague claim that an agency must have been right because it was an agency.

If the evidence shows a defensible decision, explain the reasons. If it reveals an inconsistency, omission or administrative failure, identify the precise issue and the corrective action required.

15. Kate P. — named in the SIL decision record

I want the original document examined to establish the precise role associated with your name.

If you made or contributed to the SIL decision, I want the reasons, evidence and applicable criteria identified. I want to know how the decision addressed the support needs recorded at the time and what avenues of review were available.

I am angry because decisions about supported living are not abstract exercises. They can shape where a person lives, what assistance they receive and how they manage daily life. That is why the reasons matter.

16. Ed Duncan — named in the SIL decision record

I want the record to establish whether you were the author, reviewer, approver or another participant in the decision process.

If you had a substantive role, I want that role and its scope explained. I want to know what evidence was before the decision-maker, how it was assessed and why the outcome followed.

I am not satisfied by a name appearing in a filename. I want the actual decision and its reasoning. If there is a problem with the decision, identify it precisely. If the decision was correct under the applicable rules, show why.

17. Scott Treadwell — Federal Court/PID-related record

I want the actual correspondence and assessment examined to establish what role you played and what conclusion was reached.

I want the relationship between the records, the relevant statutory framework and the subsequent handling of the matter clearly explained. I want no confusion between an assessment, a court finding, an administrative decision and an allegation made by a person seeking review.

I am fucking sick of having to reconstruct complicated processes from disconnected pieces of paper. I want the chronology, the decision and the legal significance made intelligible.

18. Debbie Mitchell — disclosure-allocation record

I want the original notice examined to establish whether and how your name is connected with the decision.

If you were involved in the process, I want the actual basis for the outcome identified. What criteria applied? What material was considered? What reasons were recorded? What further avenue, if any, was available?

I want the answer to address the substance of the disclosure, the applicable process and the reason for the decision. A procedural label alone is not a meaningful explanation to the person who submitted the material.

19. Ben Calder — complaint-handling record

I want the specific complaint record associated with your name located and checked before any personal accusation is made.

If you were responsible for rejecting, closing, redirecting or assessing a complaint, I want the reasons and the relevant record. I want the response compared with the question actually submitted.

I am fucking tired of complaint handling becoming an exercise in answering around the edges. If the issue was outside your authority, identify the correct body. If it was within your authority, explain what was done.

20. Charan Naidoo — Attorney-General's Office material

I want the exact document and your recorded role identified. If you handled correspondence, I want to know what it said, what action followed and what authority governed that action.

I am not prepared to accept a name, a title or a reference number as a substitute for a substantive answer. I want the source document and the action it records.

21. Iain Anderson — Commonwealth Ombudsman

I want the Ombudsman-related records examined to establish what was actually submitted, what the office accepted for consideration, what decisions were made and what explanations were provided.

The fact that a complaint was submitted does not, by itself, establish that every allegation in it was true. But it does create a documentary question: what happened to the complaint, and can the process be explained?

I want the answer to be clear, traceable and responsive. I am fucking tired of being unable to tell whether a question has been resolved, redirected or merely processed.

22. Hugh de Kretser — Australian Human Rights Commission leadership

I want the correspondence examined to determine which matters reached the Commission, what response was given and what process applied.

If the Commission could not consider an issue, I want the applicable reason and the proper alternative pathway explained. If it could consider the issue, I want the record to show what happened next.

I am angry about the experience of trying to navigate multiple accountability systems. I want the actual correspondence to show whether the process answered the questions I raised.

23. Elizabeth Tydd — privacy-regulatory leadership

I want the privacy-related record examined to establish who made each relevant decision and what the Office of the Australian Information Commissioner actually determined.

I want the distinction between a privacy complaint, an assessment, a regulatory determination and an allegation preserved. Those are not interchangeable things.

I am fucking tired of having to make the case for why records matter. If the documents establish an error or a gap, identify it. If they do not, explain the outcome clearly.

24. Danny Pearson — name associated with a separate employment/compensation matter

I want the particular record linked to your name identified before conclusions are drawn. I want the relevant organisation, decision, date and legal process established.

I am not going to let unrelated matters become muddled together. I want the correct decision examined under the correct rules, and I want any criticism to be grounded in the actual document.

25. Tim Goss — identity and role to be verified

I want the precise spelling, identity and relevant documentary role verified. If the records connect you to a decision or communication, I want that connection examined and explained.

I am angry enough already. I do not need an invented allegation. I need a source that establishes exactly what happened and who was responsible.

26. Liz Lindberg — identity and role to be verified

I want the document associated with your name identified and the relevant action established from its contents.

If you communicated a decision, I want the decision itself. If you acted on instructions from another person, I want the record to distinguish your role from theirs. If you were responsible for a substantive determination, I want its basis examined.

No more guesswork masquerading as accountability.

27. Debbie Morgan — identity and role to be verified

I want the source record that links you to my account identified before personal responsibility is attributed.

If the record establishes a relevant action, it should be described in full context. I want the date, the issue, the action taken and the consequence made clear.

I am demanding an accurate chain of events—not a name placed on a page without evidence.

28. Hugh Meredith — identity and role to be verified

I want the relevant record located and examined. If you participated in a decision, I want your precise role identified. If you did not, the record should not imply that you did.

I want the documentary trail to expose the real process rather than create another layer of confusion.

29. Steve Visonidis — identity and role to be verified

I want the relevant document, the institution involved and the action attributed to you established from the source.

If the evidence shows that a matter was mishandled, I want the specific failure described. If it shows something different, I want that accurately recorded. I am not interested in manufactured certainty. I want the truth of the matter documented.

30. Rachel K. C. — reported Able Point executive

I want the original organisational records to establish your full identity, position, authority and the matters that came to your attention.

If you were responsible for responding to a safeguarding concern, a service complaint or a request for assistance, I want the relevant correspondence and action records examined. I want to know what was reported, who received it, what was documented, what was escalated and what happened afterwards.

I am fucking angry at the possibility that serious concerns can be raised and the person raising them can still feel left without a meaningful answer. I want the records to establish whether that happened here, and who was responsible for each step.

31. Brett Butler — reported Able Point manager

I want the relevant management records examined to establish what responsibilities you held and what actions you took.
If a concern was escalated to management, I want the record to show when it arrived, how it was assessed, what response followed and whether another person or body was responsible for the next step.
I am not interested in vague statements about good intentions. I want the actions and records examined against the applicable obligations.
32. Cassie Makey — reported Able Point correspondence
I want the actual correspondence associated with your name examined in context. What did I ask? What did you communicate? Was a decision being conveyed, an issue being referred or a request being acknowledged? Was a substantive response provided? Did the communication identify the person responsible for any further action?
I am fucking tired of having to reconstruct what happened from fragments. I want the original messages and the surrounding chronology examined together.
33. Phillip Glass — funding or payment issue
I want the relevant funding and payment records examined to establish what authority you held, what decision was made and what reason was given.
If a payment was declined, delayed or withheld, I want the exact record, the applicable budget or funding rule and the person responsible for the decision identified. I want the practical consequences documented without confusing a disputed allegation with an established finding.
I want a clear explanation of what happened, not a circular fucking conversation in which nobody can identify the person who can resolve the issue.
34. Danny — reported support-worker incident
I want the relevant incident record to establish the worker's full identity, the date, the setting and the conduct actually reported.
If an incident occurred, I want it documented accurately. I want to know whether it was reported to management, what safeguarding response followed and whether the provider fulfilled its applicable obligations.
I am angry about the circumstances I have described. I want the evidence examined so that any substantiated failure can be addressed and any disputed detail can be resolved.
35. Tony Ridley / Tony Riddle — name and identity to be resolved
I want the spelling and identity established from the original record. I will not allow a name discrepancy to undermine the integrity of the account or cause one person to be confused with another.
If a relevant statement or action is documented, I want it quoted accurately, placed in context and assessed against the surrounding evidence.
The demand is for accountability based on what the person actually said or did—not on an unverified recollection of a name.
36. Houd Meraby — identity and role to be verified

I want the original document connecting you to my account identified. I want your role, the relevant date and the specific communication or action established.

If the evidence shows that you made a decision or communicated a position, I want it examined on its merits. If it does not establish a direct role, I want that distinction maintained.

I want a documentary record that can withstand scrutiny, not another layer of confusion.

37. April McLean — family-related testimony

I want family-related evidence treated carefully and in its proper context. Where personal testimony is relevant, I want the statement, date and circumstances recorded accurately and distinguished from independent corroboration.

I am asking for a full account of the events that matter—not for private family relationships to be turned into unsupported accusations.

38. Doug McLean — family-related testimony

I want the relevant testimony and correspondence examined in context, with particular care to distinguish direct knowledge, recollection and documented events.

The purpose is to establish what happened and what the records support. It is not to manufacture a conclusion before the evidence has been examined.

39. Tahsinullah Sultani — report or human-rights material

I want the specific report associated with your name identified and the exact role of that report in the documentary chronology explained.

If it provides evidence about a particular event or issue, I want the relevant passage examined alongside the source material it relies on. If it records an allegation or interpretation, that should be described accurately.

I want the archive to make the evidentiary position clearer, not blur the line between a report, an allegation and an independently established finding.

PART III — ELEVEN FURTHER NAMES THAT MUST BE CHECKED AGAINST THE REGISTRY

The next names have appeared in the earlier working list or in the broader public-office context. Their inclusion here is a request to verify relevance, not a finding that they personally caused my circumstances. The original documents must establish whether any of them had a direct role.

40. Paul Brereton

I want the record checked for the precise document, position and action associated with this name. If a decision or correspondence connects you to my account, I want it identified and explained. If no direct connection exists, I want that made clear.

I am fucking sick of names floating around an archive without an accessible explanation of their significance. I want the source, the action and the consequence connected—or the supposed connection discarded.

41. Andrew Charlton

I want any relevant record identified and checked against the chronology. A public position does not prove personal involvement. A documented action, however, should be examined on its actual merits.

I want the institutional process made transparent enough that a person can tell who had responsibility and who did not.
42. Clare O'Neil
I want the source material checked to establish whether any decision, referral or correspondence connects your office to the matters I have raised.
If a connection exists, I want the exact action and its rationale examined. If it does not, I will not pretend that it does.
My anger is directed at unanswered questions and unresolved consequences. The documentary record must establish whether you have any direct responsibility for either.
43. Mark Dreyfus
I want the relevant dates, office and documentary connection established before conclusions are drawn about any Attorney-General-related matter.
I want the actual legal or administrative decision examined, not a broad allegation attached to a prominent name. If the records show that an office considered a matter, I want to know what it did and why.
44. Anna Booth
I want the specific source record associated with your name located. If the record establishes a relevant role, I want it described accurately and examined in context.
I want the accountability process to be serious enough to distinguish an actual decision-maker from someone whose name appears in an unrelated document.
45. Louise Glanville
I want any relevant administrative or statutory role established from the source records. If a particular action is attributed to you, I want the date, authority, reasons and consequences examined.
I am demanding a factual answer. I will not substitute a guess for a finding, and I will not accept a vague institutional response in place of an explanation.
46. Andrew Leigh
I want the source archive checked for a direct connection to the issues I have raised. If there is a relevant record, it should be cited and assessed. If there is no direct connection, your name should not be used to imply responsibility.
That is what an evidence-based accountability process requires, however fucking frustrating it may be to wait for the records to be assembled.
47. Rhonda Galbally
I want any relevant connection between your role in disability-sector governance and a specific decision in my archive established from the documents.
Participation in disability-sector governance does not, by itself, establish responsibility for an individual participant's decision. If a source shows a direct role, I want that role examined. If not, the record should not imply one.
48. Leah van Poppel

I want the archive checked for a specific connection to my case or to a decision I have challenged.
If there is none, that must remain clear. If there is a documented connection, I want the source and its significance explained.
I want a proper investigation of actual responsibility—not a list inflated with names that cannot be tied to the evidence.
49. Bruce Bonyhady
I want any relevant connection between the NDIS review process and the particular issues in my account established from the record.
The existence of a national review does not establish personal responsibility for an individual decision. But where a review, policy recommendation or governance process is directly relevant, I want the relationship explained and the implications examined.
I am asking for the substance of my concerns to be considered, not buried beneath institutional descriptions.
50. Lisa Paul
I want any relevant document connecting the review process to my particular concerns identified and examined.
If the record supports a direct connection, explain it. If it does not, do not imply one. I want the distinction between systemic analysis and responsibility for an individual decision preserved.
That is the standard I want applied to every person named in this dossier: identify the record, establish the role, examine the action, and explain the consequences.
PART IV — THE DOCUMENTS THAT MUST BE PUT ON THE TABLE
The names mean nothing without the records. The records mean little if nobody examines them in context. And an investigation means very little to me if it cannot explain what happened, who made the relevant decisions and what should happen next.
These are the principal documents I want examined together:
1. NDIS plan approval — 20 November 2025
The plan records a total of $366,406.69. I want the approved supports compared with the practical support and accommodation circumstances described in the subsequent records.
2. Accommodation request — 20 January 2026
I want the request, the recipient, the response and any subsequent action traced. I want the evidence to establish what was requested and what happened afterwards.
3. Formal notice concerning NDIS service failure — 20 January 2026
I want every issue raised in the notice mapped to the person or organisation responsible for addressing it, and the resulting action documented.
4. Federal Court/PID assessment — 27 March 2023
I want the relevant assessment, legal framework, decision-maker and subsequent correspondence examined together.
5. Disclosure-allocation decision — 18 June 2023

I want the actual reasons for the recorded decision and the process that followed examined, without confusing an administrative outcome with a judicial finding.

6. Commonwealth Ombudsman complaint — 15 November 2021

I want the complaint's contents, the response, any later correspondence and the recorded outcome placed in one chronology.

The closing statement

To every official, executive, minister, manager, complaint handler and decision-maker whose actions are actually documented in my records:

I am fucking angry.

I am angry that I have had to spend so much time trying to establish what happened. I am angry that the consequences I describe are lived by me, while the explanations are distributed across institutions, inboxes, decisions and procedures. I am angry that I have had to preserve and organise my own documentary history in order to keep asking the same fundamental questions.

I want every person who made a consequential decision to explain it.

I want every office that received a serious concern to explain what it did with it.

I want every disputed refusal, delay, referral, assessment and administrative outcome examined against the evidence available at the time.

I want the chronology to show where responsibility changed hands, where a response was provided, where a question remained unanswered and where the available record does not permit a conclusion.

I want mistakes corrected. I want substantiated failures acknowledged. I want appropriate remedies considered. I want people who were not responsible excluded from unsupported accusations, because a credible investigation must identify the right people for the right reasons.

And I want the fucking human being at the centre of this account to stop disappearing behind the paperwork.

I do not need fifty people to be declared guilty in advance. I need the fifty people who are genuinely relevant to be identified from the records, their actual roles established, their decisions scrutinised and their explanations tested against the evidence.

The anger is mine. The testimony is mine. The demand for answers is mine. The findings must be earned by the evidence.

One important limitation remains: the 50 numbered entries above are not a verified ranking of the top 50 people in your GitHub registry. Some entries concern offices or roles rather than individually verified decision-makers, and some names still need to be matched to their source documents. I will not misrepresent that as a completed registry extraction.

The next step is to extract the registry's actual named individuals and link each one to the precise document that identifies their role. That is how this becomes a rigorous, devastatingly specific accountability dossier instead of a list that someone can dismiss because the evidence has not been matched to the names.

I want the truth exposed. I want the unanswered questions answered. And I want accountability to mean something in the life of the person who has been demanding it.
