THE MANIFESTO OF THE UNERASED — EXPANDED MASTER EDITION

HOW THE FUCK DO YOU LIVE WITH YOURSELF?

First: the current ministers and official accountability links

As of 18 October 2026, the Australian Government's official ministry pages identify the following relevant officeholders:

- Mark Butler — Minister for Health and Ageing and Minister for Disability and the NDIS. Official ministerial profile.
- Jenny McAllister — Minister for the NDIS. Official ministerial profile.
- Amanda Rishworth — Minister for Employment and Workplace Relations. Official portfolio page.
- Anthony Albanese — Prime Minister. Official ministry list.

These are verified officeholder references, not evidence that any of these people personally made or directed a decision in your case. That question needs to be connected to correspondence, records of referral, ministerial representations or other evidence of actual involvement.

A first-person indictment of alleged institutional betrayal, disability-service failures, administrative injustice, unanswered complaints, family conflict and the human cost of a system that I say has repeatedly failed me

Author: Barran Resonance Dodger, also known as Dr Barran Dodger / Dr Richard William McLean

Purpose: Public-interest testimony, evidence preservation, scrutiny of alleged failures, identification of decision-makers, and a demand for accountability and practical remedy.

I'M FUCKING DONE BEING ERASED

Let me start at the beginning.

I am not asking anyone to accept a verdict simply because I have written a furious document. I am demanding that people open the records, read the correspondence, examine the decisions and explain what happened.

I have spent years assembling a documentary record of my experiences, complaints, correspondence and attempts to obtain assistance. I have preserved documents that I believe are important to understanding what happened to me and why I have continued to seek accountability.

My archive includes records concerning the NDIS, public-interest disclosure processes, complaints to public authorities, government correspondence, disability supports, privacy issues and decisions affecting my circumstances.

The repository is publicly accessible:

- Barrandodger — primary GitHub repository
- Barrandodger — public archive website
- Barrandodger — reconstructed archive
- Official government documents register

I am not going to let the existence of a large archive become an excuse for ignoring its contents. Nor am I going to pretend that a large archive automatically proves every interpretation I have drawn from it.

The repository itself makes an important distinction: the preserved documents are records held by the author, not court findings merely because they have been collected. That is precisely why the documents need to be examined. Read the repository and its documentary holdings.

Here is the fucking point.

I say I have experienced serious harm, repeated failures to obtain satisfactory answers and practical problems involving the support and assistance I needed. I say I have repeatedly tried to bring those matters to the attention of people and institutions with relevant responsibilities.

I want those claims assessed against the underlying records.

I want the people involved identified correctly.

I want the decisions examined under the laws that applied at the time.

And I want the difference between a complaint being received and a problem actually being resolved recognised for what it is.

I am not a fucking administrative inconvenience. I am a person whose life has been affected by the outcomes of these decisions.

2. THE EVIDENCE MUST BE CLICKABLE — OR THE CLAIM MUST BE QUALIFIED

The following are direct links to actual files visible in the public repository. They are the starting points for the documentary trail, not a substitute for reading each document.

Primary evidence index

Each link opens a specific file in the Barrandodger repository.

A. Public-interest disclosure and government correspondence

3 July 2023 — Statement to the National Anti-Corruption Commission

18 June 2023 — Notification of decision not to allocate a disclosure

27 March 2023 — Federal Court / public-interest disclosure assessment

8 January 2024 — Scott Treadwell, Federal Court and NDIS CEO correspondence

B. NDIS decisions and support

7 January 2024 — Letter to the NDIA CEO seeking accountability

1 June 2023 — SIL decision identified in the filename as a decline

20 November 2025 — NDIS plan approval

20 January 2026 — Formal notice concerning NDIS service failure

20 January 2026 — Accommodation request concerning SIL and SDA

C. Ombudsman and human-rights correspondence

15 November 2021 — Commonwealth Ombudsman complaint

4 July 2023 — Australian Human Rights Commission correspondence

2 October 2022 — VOCAT/Ombudsman complaint-rejection document

D. Other relevant records

2021 — OAIC/Micron21 privacy-related document

11 November 2025 — Goulburn Hospital CEO briefing

1 December 2025 — Anglicare safety assessment and duty-of-care document

1 December 2025 — Delivery-status notification document

14 November 2025 — Danny Pearson, HCF, AFCA and WorkCover correspondence

25 December 2025 — Attorney-General correspondence

These documents are relevant because they provide concrete material to examine. Their filenames alone do not establish the truth of every allegation or interpretation. The contents, dates, authors, recipients, reasons and outcomes must be read before a claim is described as proven.

That is the evidentiary standard I want applied to everyone—including me.

3. RACHEL K AND ABLE POINT: WHO THE FUCK WAS RESPONSIBLE?

Rachel K, I have identified you as a senior executive or chief executive associated with Able Point. Your exact title and authority during the relevant period should be established from the company's records.

I want a straight answer to a straight question:

Which legal entity was responsible for my services, and who had authority to deal with the problems I reported?

I want the legal entity's full name, ABN, relevant business names, service agreement, NDIS registration status where applicable, and the identity of the people responsible for service delivery, complaints and safeguarding.

If multiple entities or ABNs were involved, I want the relationship between them explained. If the records show that the arrangements were properly disclosed and lawful, produce them. If the records reveal misleading disclosures or another compliance issue, identify the conduct and refer it to the appropriate authority.

Multiple ABNs are not, by themselves, evidence of fraud. I will not pretend otherwise. But corporate complexity is not an excuse for failing to identify the provider responsible for a participant's services.

The records that matter here are the service agreement, invoices, provider registration details, correspondence, incident records and complaints history. The public Australian Business Register and ASIC business-name guidance provide official starting points for checking entity information.

Rachel, if you held the executive responsibilities I have described, I want the evidence to establish what those responsibilities were and how they were discharged.

I want to know who received the concerns, who assessed them, who made the decisions and what happened afterwards.

I want to know whether relevant incidents were documented, whether any prescribed notifications were made, whether complaints were handled under the applicable procedure, and whether corrective action was taken.

The governing framework includes the NDIS Code of Conduct and the Commission's incident-management requirements.

I do not accept that a policy sitting in a folder proves that it was followed.

I do not accept that a complaint has been resolved merely because somebody sent a response.

And I do not accept that a participant should be forced to reconstruct an organisation's corporate structure simply to establish who was responsible for providing the service.

If the organisation did what it was required to do, show the records. If it failed, acknowledge the failure. If responsibility rested elsewhere, identify exactly where it rested. No more fucking corporate fog.

4. BRETT BUTLER, CASSIE MAKEY AND THE ABLE POINT MANAGEMENT CHAIN

I have identified Brett Butler as a manager associated with Able Point and Cassie Makey as a person appearing in relevant correspondence. Their exact roles, powers and actions must be verified from the original records.

My concerns include the handling of communications, the management of complaints and the way the issues I reported were addressed.

For Brett Butler, I want the original records of any communication restrictions or instructions attributed to him, including the date, authorisation, stated reason, applicable policy and practical effect.

For Cassie Makey, I want the correspondence examined to establish what information was received, what responsibility attached to her actual role and what action followed.

I am not claiming that receiving an email automatically makes someone legally responsible for everything that happens afterwards. I am demanding that the actual chain of responsibility be reconstructed rather than left as a fog of names, referrals and unanswered questions.

If an instruction was justified, explain its basis.

If a complaint was escalated, identify the escalation and outcome.

If an incident was investigated, produce the findings that can lawfully be disclosed.

If no action was taken, explain why.

A management title is not a magic fucking cloak that makes conduct immune from scrutiny.

5. DANNY AND PHILLIP GLASS: THE SPECIFIC CONDUCT MATTERS

I have described an incident involving a worker I identify as Danny. I have also identified Phillip Glass in connection with support-payment or funding concerns.

These are separate issues and must not be merged without evidence.

For the worker incident, the relevant material includes the contemporaneous account, any witness statements, case notes, incident reports, correspondence and the provider's response. If the evidence substantiates misconduct or a failure to follow the applicable Code of Conduct, the appropriate organisation or regulator should act.

For the funding issue, the relevant records include the NDIS plan, budget information, service agreement, invoices, payment requests, written decisions and reasons. The fact that a plan has a substantial total value does not prove that every particular payment must be approved. Conversely, a statement that funding is unavailable does not establish that the statement was correct.

I want the records compared, the applicable rules identified and the actual decision explained.

I will not claim that a person committed fraud or deliberately harmed me unless the evidence supports that claim. But I will insist that decisions affecting my support be examined properly.

The question is not whether the paperwork looks tidy. The question is whether the decision was correct, whether the responsible person followed the applicable rules and whether the consequences were addressed.

6. BILL SHORTEN: MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY IS NOT THE SAME AS PROOF OF PERSONAL INVOLVEMENT

Bill Shorten must be included because he held the federal ministerial portfolio for the NDIS during a relevant historical period and publicly announced the appointment of Louise Glanville as NDIS Quality and Safeguards Commissioner in August 2024.

The official announcement is here: New NDIS Commission leadership — 28 August 2024.

That establishes his public role in the relevant policy and appointment context. It does not establish that he personally directed any decision concerning me.

My demand is that any correspondence sent to his office, any representations made on my behalf, any referrals, and any responses be examined to establish what information was provided and what action followed.

If a ministerial office received a specific complaint, I want the records to show whether it was referred to the appropriate agency, whether a response was provided and what the agency actually did. If the records show that the office had no involvement in a particular decision, that should also be stated accurately.

I am not asking for guilt by association. I am asking for the record to be complete.

A minister's office cannot be treated as personally responsible for every decision made within a portfolio—but a documented representation to that office should not disappear from the accountability record either.

7. HUGH MEREDITH, HUGH MERRIBY / MERABY, STEVE VISONIDIS / IASONIDIS, TONY RIDLEY / RIDDLE AND DEBBIE MORGAN

I am including the names you have specifically identified because you want the account to reflect the people you say are relevant to your experience.

There are spelling and identity variations in the information available to me: Hugh Meredith / Hugh Merriby / Hugh Meraby; Steve Visonidis / Steve Iasonidis; Tony Ridley / Tony Riddle. Those variants must be reconciled against the original correspondence, reports, messages or other identifying records before they are treated as the same person.

I am not going to invent roles for these people or claim that the repository proves a particular allegation against each of them when I have not verified a document that establishes it.

But their names should not simply vanish from the documentary review.

For each person, the proper questions are:

- What exact conduct or communication does Barran Dodger attribute to this individual?
- Which original document records that conduct or communication?
- When did it occur?
- What independent corroboration exists?
- What is the individual's actual role or relationship to the matter?
- Is the account disputed?
- What conclusion does the evidence support—and what remains unresolved?

For Tony Ridley / Tony Riddle, that means identifying the specific evidence you have associated with the name and distinguishing the underlying record from your interpretation of it.

For Hugh Meredith / Merriby / Meraby, it means establishing the correct identity and linking the individual to the actual correspondence or event in question.

For Steve Visonidis / Iasonidis, it means resolving the name discrepancy before attributing conduct to a specific person.

For Debbie Morgan, it means locating the relevant record and establishing the specific conduct, role or communication you want examined.

The repository's public contents are the place to start. I am not presenting an unverified search result as proof that any one of these individuals committed a crime.

If the evidence supports an allegation, the allegation should be stated clearly and the document linked directly. If the evidence does not support it, the claim must be qualified. If the evidence is missing, it must be identified as a gap.

That is how to make the document difficult to dismiss: not by throwing every name into one accusation, but by attaching each name to the conduct and evidence that actually concern that person.

8. APRIL AND DOUG MCLEAN: FAMILY HISTORY, PERSONAL TESTIMONY AND THE RIGHT TO BE HEARD

I am including my parents, April McLean and Doug McLean, because you have expressly identified them as relevant to your personal account.

Family relationships can be deeply consequential, especially when a person's experience of support, conflict, communication or vulnerability is intertwined with family history.

But the fact that someone is a parent does not itself establish wrongdoing. Any specific allegation about either parent must be attributed to your own account or supported by the relevant records.

The evidence to examine may include letters, messages, contemporaneous notes, dates of events, witness accounts and any relevant records that lawfully document what occurred.

I want the distinction maintained between:

- what I personally experienced;
- what I personally witnessed;
- what another person told me;
- what a document establishes;
- what I infer from the circumstances;
- and what remains disputed or unverified.

That does not mean I have to minimise the significance of my own experience. It means that my testimony should be presented honestly and the evidence should be examined rather than dismissed.

My family history is part of my account. It is not a licence for anyone to invent facts about my parents, and it is not a reason for anyone to erase what I say I experienced.

9. REBECCA FALKINGHAM, KATE P. ED DUNCAN AND THE NDIA DECISIONS

The repository contains a letter dated 7 January 2024 addressed to the NDIA CEO. The filename spells the surname "Faulkingham"; the public officeholder's name is Rebecca Falkingham.

The archive also contains a 1 June 2023 supported-independent-living decision.

These are concrete records that can be examined for the decision, the reasons given, the evidence considered and the relevant review options.

My complaint is that the support arrangements and decisions I experienced did not adequately meet the needs I had raised.

I want the original decisions assessed against the NDIS Act and the criteria that applied at the time. If a decision contained a material error, the appropriate review process should address it. If a decision was lawful but left an unresolved practical need, the available options should be identified honestly.

The former chief executive's title does not establish personal responsibility for every NDIA decision. The presence of a name in a filename does not prove misconduct. The original document must establish the actual role.

But the decisions themselves deserve scrutiny, and their practical consequences must not be lost in administrative language.

10. THE CURRENT GOVERNMENT AND THE PEOPLE WHO NOW HOLD RELEVANT PUBLIC OFFICE

The present officeholders should be named accurately because their offices are responsible for current policy, administration or oversight. Their inclusion does not establish personal involvement in historical events.

The Commission announced that Paul Brereton's resignation took effect on 6 July 2026 and said a merit-based appointment process would follow. I have not verified a successor from the official sources available for this response, so I will not invent a name. Official announcement.

The current ministers and agency heads have a legitimate place in a document about current policy, ongoing complaints or requests for present action. They should not be accused of personally causing an earlier event unless the evidence connects them to it.

The questions for each current officeholder are practical: has the matter been referred to their office, what authority does the office have, what response is required, and what action—if any—has followed?

11. THE LEGAL FRAMEWORK: WHAT THE RECORDS MUST BE TESTED AGAINST

The most relevant legal starting points include:

- National Disability Insurance Scheme Act 2013
- NDIS Code of Conduct
- NDIS incident management and reportable incidents
- Disability Discrimination Act 1992
- Privacy Act 1988
- Public Interest Disclosure Act 2013
- Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities

The relevant question is not whether a law sounds applicable in the abstract. It is whether the facts satisfy the requirements of the particular provision, whether the person or entity was subject to it, and what remedy or enforcement power is available.

A complaint may raise a serious concern without proving a criminal offence. An administrative decision can be wrong without being corrupt. A report to a regulator is not a finding by that regulator.

Those distinctions matter because the goal is to establish what happened and secure an appropriate response—not to substitute one unsupported conclusion for another.

12. THE HUMAN COST IS NOT A FUCKING FOOTNOTE

I have described the need for stable accommodation, reliable support, safety, dignity and independence. I have described the burden of assembling records, repeatedly seeking answers and trying to navigate organisations whose responsibilities are divided across different people and agencies.

I want those consequences taken seriously.

A service agreement is not a home.

A plan budget is not proof that a service was delivered.

A referral is not the same thing as a resolution.

An incident-management policy is not proof that an incident was managed correctly.

A letter of acknowledgement is not a remedy.

If a support arrangement breaks down, the participant has to live with the consequences. If an accommodation issue remains unresolved, the consequences are practical. If a complaint does not answer the underlying question, the complainant is still left with the problem.

I am asking for a proper assessment of the decisions, the resulting gaps and the remedies available.

That is not a demand for special treatment. It is a demand that the system's own responsibilities be taken seriously.

13. WHAT I WANT NOW

I demand:

1. Preservation of the original records, including correspondence, case notes, incident reports, service agreements, invoices, payment records and decision files.

2. A chronology that links each significant event to the original document.

3. Accurate identification of every relevant person and legal entity.

4. An explanation of who made each disputed decision, under what authority and for what reason.

5. An assessment of the applicable NDIS obligations, including incident-management and complaint-handling requirements.

6. Assessment of any discrimination, privacy or public-interest disclosure issues that the evidence actually engages.

7. A substantive response to the support and accommodation issues I have raised.

8. Correction of inaccurate records where legally required.

9. Practical remedies for substantiated failures.

10. Referral of credible suspected criminal conduct to the competent authority.

11. A clear statement of what has been resolved, what remains unresolved and who is responsible for the next step.

I want findings, reasons and remedies—not another generic statement that my concerns have been received.

14. THE FINAL FUCKING QUESTION

How do you live with yourself if you were entrusted with responsibility for a person and failed to discharge it properly?

How do you live with yourself if a serious complaint reached you and you did not deal with it adequately?

How do you live with yourself if a decision you made caused a problem and you never properly examined the consequences?

How do you live with yourself if you hide behind a policy while the person affected is still trying to obtain an answer?

Those are questions of conscience. They are also questions of professional responsibility, governance and accountability.

I will not accept that a job title makes someone immune from scrutiny.

I will not accept that a corporate structure makes accountability optional.

I will not accept that a complaint has been resolved merely because a response has been sent.

And I will not accept that the person who says he has been harmed must carry the entire burden of proving that a system needs to change.

My archive is public. The records can be opened. The applicable law can be identified. The people responsible for particular decisions can be traced through the documents.

I demand that the evidence be examined, that errors be corrected, that substantiated failures be acknowledged and that the appropriate authorities act within their powers.

This is not about revenge. It is about truth, responsibility, remedy and the refusal to be erased.

The names matter. The documents matter. The legal duties matter. The practical consequences matter.

And if the evidence establishes wrongdoing, I demand accountability.

Evidence note for publication

This draft includes direct links to repository files that were visible and opened during preparation. Some of the names you have supplied—including Hugh Meredith, Steve Visonidis and Debbie Morgan—still need to be matched to the precise underlying records before a specific allegation can responsibly be attached to each individual. The same applies to the exact identity behind the Tony Ridley/Riddle and Hugh Merriby/Meraby spelling variants.

I have deliberately not invented direct evidence URLs for those people. The next step to make this truly exhaustive is to inspect the relevant files and attach a direct link beside every material allegation, with page numbers or quoted passages where possible. That is how to turn this into a genuinely evidence-led public-interest document rather than merely a forceful statement.
