THE DESECRATION OF A NAME · A FULL ARTICLE · 15 OCTOBER 2026

The Desecration of a Name, the Destruction of a Life, and the Denial of Justice

False allegations without a charge, without a trial, without police involvement — punishment by stigma, and the demand to clear the record.

SHARE THIS PAGE

> Barran's name, person and character have, in his account, been subjected to a sustained campaign of vilification through allegations of libel, slander and other forms of personal and social discredit. He describes this campaign as deliberately orchestrated, exceptionally well-funded and designed to discredit his testimony, destroy his story and create an environment in which no individual would be willing to stand publicly in his defence. He attributes this targeting to covert operations, alleged government contractors and individuals whom he believes have participated in organised harassment, including conduct he describes as involving military-grade technology and gang-stalking.

The consequences, as Barran describes them, have extended far beyond reputational damage. He says his social relationships, family connections and ordinary opportunities for human companionship have been systematically devastated. The result is a form of social punishment without the safeguards of a formal legal process: a life experienced as though guilt has already been established, despite the absence of a criminal conviction.

The challenge: arrest me, or the allegations are nothing

Edit with Base44 ×

Barran states that he has repeatedly challenged authorities to arrest and charge him if there is a legitimate evidentiary basis for doing so. He has gone so far as to invite investigation into the most serious accusations he says have been associated with his name, including allegations concerning paedophilia, rape, terrorism and extortion. He maintains that he has not been arrested or charged in relation to these accusations and that no criminal conviction establishes his guilt. The precise status of any investigation or allegation must, of course, be determined from the relevant official records.

He is demanded, in effect, to be arrested for the alleged libel, slander and accusations of which he is supposedly guilty — yet there is no charge. There is no rest. There is no legal process. There is a total absence of any police involvement whatsoever, and no pathway to justice — while Barran has suffered a terrible fate as if he were guilty of the crimes he has been blasphemed with, without evidence, due legal process or redress.

The central question is therefore not whether accusations can be circulated, but whether they can be substantiated. An accusation is not a finding of fact, repetition is not corroboration, and reputational destruction is not a substitute for due process.

The significance of the contradiction

The significance of Barran's account lies in the apparent contradiction between the severity of the stigma he says he has endured and the absence, as he describes it, of corresponding criminal proceedings. If a person is subjected to the practical consequences of condemnation without the transparency, evidentiary scrutiny and procedural protections of a prosecution, the circumstances demand careful examination. Such a disparity does not, by itself, establish an organised extrajudicial campaign; it does, however, raise legitimate questions about the origins of the accusations, the evidence supporting them, the conduct of those disseminating them and the mechanisms available for redress.

The evidence Barran has published — fact-checkable, in the public domain

19

Edit with Base44

Barran maintains that his own testimony and documentary archive are publicly available and evidence-based. He challenges institutions, journalists, legal professionals and members of the public to examine the underlying records rather than rely on characterisations repeated without substantiation. His position is that the evidence he has published deserves the same scrutiny demanded of any other evidentiary claim — and that conclusions should follow examination of primary sources, not prejudice against the person presenting them.

He further reports that an NDIS provider conveyed information to him concerning alleged fabrication of reports and an alleged threat to his life, which he understood to have been confirmed by the Australian Federal Police. Those claims require verification against the original communications and any relevant police records. The distinction matters: what a person was told, what an agency formally confirmed and what can independently be established are separate evidentiary questions.

Barran also describes allegations involving a young woman as having been fabricated or misrepresented in a manner that damaged his reputation. He maintains that the underlying sexual encounter was consensual and that the subsequent treatment of the matter reflected, in his view, homophobic prejudice and the shaming of a gay man. Any definitive account of what police established, what was alleged and whether any official finding was made must be grounded in the relevant records rather than assumed.

These distinctions do not diminish the seriousness of Barran's stated experience. They establish the standard by which it should be examined: original documents, identifiable sources, corroboration, clear chronology and a fair assessment of competing explanations.

Punishment through stigma, not adjudication

The deeper issue is the possibility of punishment through stigma rather than adjudication. When allegations become a substitute for evidence, when social exclusion becomes a substitute for accountability, and when a person's attempts to obtain a formal determination produce no clear resolution, the resulting harm can be profound. Yet the answer cannot be to replace one untested accusation with another. It must be to examine the records, establish what can be proved, identify what remains unresolved and provide a fair process through which the truth can be assessed.

Barran's challenge is direct: examine the evidence, identify the facts, substantiate the accusations and account for the consequences. If the allegations ag by evidence, that evidence should be capable of scrutiny through ap procedures. If they are not, the absence of substantiation should not be concealed by repetition, insinuation or the destruction of a person's standing in the community.

Edit with Base44

What justice requires

Justice requires more than the circulation of allegations. It requires evidence, impartial scrutiny, procedural fairness and accountability. No person should be treated as though convicted merely because accusations have become socially powerful, and no testimony should be dismissed solely because of the identity or reputation of the person presenting it.

DARE ANY PERSON TO EXAMINE THIS PDF DOCUMENT

The total transcription of Barran's months-long narrative testimony with the NDIS provider Ben — documenting exile and asylum, the “close call” of the assassination attempt, and the NDA he was forced to sign after police confirmed his story.

OPEN THE FULL BEN NDIS TRANSCRIPTION (PDF) ↗

READ THE FULL TRANSCRIPTION ON THIS SITE →

The direct quotes, verbatim from the PDFs

THE ASSASSINATION ATTEMPT WAS A “CLOSE CALL”

> “Yes even the police said it was a close call”

Ben text screenshots 2 & 3 — same exchange (screenshot 3 is dated 11 February, 1:52 pm)

Ben text screenshot 2 — exposed Ben text screenshot 3 — how did I end up

19

Edit with Base44

THE POLICE, THE CONSENSUAL ENCOUNTER AND THE REPORT

> “The police told me about the consensual regretted sex”

This is the complete verbatim line as it appears in the record. The documents do not contain the phrase “fabrication of report”; the reference appears exactly as this line, in the same exchange as the “close call” message.

Ben text screenshots 2 & 3 — same exchange

Ben text screenshot 2 — exposed Ben text screenshot 3 — how did I end up

CORRUPTION AT THE VERY TOP — THE BILL SHORTEN REFERENCES

> “The police want to know if you are mentally ready to challenge Bill Shorten in a court of law as his lawyers might use your history of mental health as an excuse to discredit your story.”

> “You can't erase this. Neither can bill shorten.”

Screenshot 1 — hit list; second quote from the full transcription, Tuesday 22 April, 1:31 pm

Ben text screenshot 1 — hit list Ben_Ndis_'Help' — the full months-long transcription (PDF)

THE NDA AND THE “AGENCY GRADE” AUTO-WIPE

> “When I signed the agreement it instantly disappeared off my phone. A message popped up that said your device has been cleared of classified information. It's some sort of agency grade electronic document that automatically wipes itself off your...”

Verbatim from the record, dated 9 September 2025, 3:50 pm. The line documents the signed agreement vanishing and the “agency grade” self-wiping document; it ends mid-sentence in the screenshot itself.

Ben text screenshot 4 — NDA auto-wipe

Ben text screenshot 4 — NDA auto-wipe

Ben (DSW Disability, NDIS provider) — text messages: assassination evidence

Ben (DSW Disability) — text messages: assassination confirmation

Ben text screenshot 1 — hit list

Edit with Base44

Ben text screenshot 4 — NDA auto-wipe

Ben — NDIS disclosure text messages

FORMAL NOTICE — NDIS Support Coordination, Choice and Control (complete)

What this PDF documents, in Barran's account: the assassination attempt occurred in Port Macquarie, where he lived as a disabled person under the support coordination of Sukhi Tear of Perth — whose NDIS support coordination oversaw his expulsion from accommodation in Sadlier that he was trapped in and forced to leave by NCAT, police and the Public Guardian, exiling him in breach of every ethical obligation of their agencies and services, meaning instant dismissal. Barran alleges the assassins were caught through the use of AI to identify any odd number plates across NSW, that Sukhi Tear was not only made aware of the assassination attempt but was appointed by the same minister who ordered it, and that to this day Sukhi Tear refuses a legal cease-and-desist notice to be removed from his care, as per NDIS policies and his rights of choice and control. Every part of this account requires verification against the original communications and any relevant official records — which is precisely why the transcription is published in full.

THE FEDERAL COURT'S OWN WORDS · 27 MARCH 2023

The Federal Court acknowledged the disclosure — and declined it in the same letter

In response to Barran's correspondence of 7, 23 and 24 March 2023, Scott Tredwell, General Counsel of the Federal Court of Australia, writing as an authorised officer under the Public Interest Disclosure Act 2013 on behalf of the Chief Executive Officer and Principal Registrar, assessed the disclosure. On 27 March 2023 he signed a letter that, in its own words, confirms three extraordinary things at once — and then declines to act on any of them.

First, the letter confirms in writing that Barran is a whistleblower with discloser status under the PID Act — this is the origin of the phrase “Federal-Court-confirmed Protected Disclosure maker” throughout the archive. Second, the same letter lists, in Tredwell's own words, the three categories of serious conduct Barran's disclosure was believed to show. Third, in the same polite bureaucratic language, the letter declares that the conduct “does not relate in any way” to the Federal Court — and that no further action will be taken. In Barran's account, he asked the highest authority in the land for help, and the same letter that acknowledged the substance of what he disclosed simultaneously desecrated his humanity, his person, his story, his facts and his evidence — a disgraceful attack on him dressed up in polite language.

19

Edit with Base44

Every quote below is verbatim from the documented PDF, linked beneath it, so that anyone can open the letter and check each word.

THE FEDERAL COURT'S CONFIRMATION OF HIS DISCLOSER STATUS — IN ITS OWN WORDS

> "On the information you have provided me, I am satisfied that you are, or were, an employee with the Department of Social Services, providing services under the trading name Rich McLean, Arts Life Coach, Peer-Support Worker & Mental Health Advocate."

This sentence is the documented significance of the whole letter: an authorised officer of the Federal Court, applying the Public Interest Disclosure Act 2013, states in writing that he is satisfied of Barran's status as a Commonwealth discloser. It is the factual foundation of the archive's description of Barran as a Federal-Court-confirmed Protected Disclosure maker.

THE THREE THINGS THE DISCLOSURE WAS ACKNOWLEDGED TO SHOW — IN TREDWELL'S OWN WORDS

I am satisfied, from the correspondence and other information provided, that you believe that the information you have disclosed tends to show one or more instances of conduct that:

> "perverts, or is engaged in for the purpose of perverting, or attempting to pervert, the course of justice; section 29 Item 3(a) PID Act;"

> "conduct that constitutes maladministration; section 29 Item 4 PID Act; and"

> "conduct that unreasonably results in a danger to the health or safety of one or more persons; or unreasonably results in, or increases, a risk of danger to the health or safety of one or more persons; section 29 Item 8 PID Act."

In plain terms, the three categories the Federal Court's authorised officer acknowledged the disclosure to concern: the perversion — or attempted perversion — of the course of justice; maladministration; and conduct unreasonably endangering the health or safety of one or more persons.

THE ASSUMPTION OF DISCLOSABLE CONDUCT — IN TREDWELL'S OWN WORDS

> "It is difficult to determine whether this belief is based on reasonable grounds or not. However, for the purposes of the initial assessment I am prepared to assume that the conduct disclosed in your correspondence and other information received is disclosable conduct for the purposes of the PID Act."

19

Edit with Base44

THE POLITE LANGUAGE OF DECLINE — IN TREDWELL'S OWN WORDS

> "I am satisfied from the information that you provided that the conduct disclosed in your email correspondence and attached documents does not relate in any way to the Federal Court, FCFCOA or the NNTT."

> "This means that no further action under the PID Act will be taken by the Federal Court or FCFCOA, or any other Commonwealth agency on the correspondence and other information you provided to the Federal Court or FCFCOA."

This is the moment Barran describes: in the same letter that confirms his status and acknowledges the three categories of serious conduct, the disclosure is politely routed to nowhere. No charge, no investigation, no allocation, no remedy — a refusal dressed in the courteous language of policy and process.

Federal Court PID Assessment, 27 March 2023 — signed by Scott Tredwell, General Counsel

8 January 2024 correspondence concerning Scott Treadwell, superannuation and the NDIS CEO

18 June 2023 notification of decision not to allocate a disclosure

Written 15 October 2026 from the archive's own record. Nothing here asks to be believed — open the documents, follow the hashes, and reach your own verdict.

THE DIVINE RECKONING — READ THE FULL ARTICLE →

READ THE FULL STORY

SHARE THIS PAGE

THE MAILING LIST

19

Edit with Base44

One email list, on every page. This is the asset that outlives every platform — the direct line between the record and the people who read it.

your@email.com

JOIN THE LIST

An accusation is not a finding of fact, repetition is not corroboration, and reputational destruction is not a substitute for due process. Every claim above links to its own primary document — the record is the source, and the source is public.

19

Edit with Base44