THE SOVEREIGN WITNESS

THE TABLES HAVE TURNED · THE RECORD REMAINS

A FOUNDATIONAL PROPHETIC TESTIMONY AND DOCUMENTARY RECORD

BARRAN DODGER
Dr Richard William McLean

5 November 2026

EDITORIAL AND DOCUMENTARY NOTE

This publication presents the requested passage from the supplied website-capture PDF, beginning with “My allegiance is with the Most High God” and ending with “Praise Jesus.” The original testimony is retained in its source sequence. Paragraphs have been reflowed for book reading; line-wrap hyphenation and capture-only page furniture have been repaired or removed. No narrative passage has been intentionally summarised or redacted.

The source contains repeated declarations, overlapping passages, and supplementary sections. Those repetitions are retained. This edition does not convert allegations, interpretations, personal testimony or inferences into findings of fact. The documentary links in the separate verification guide are signposts to public archive records; each record must be read in its own context and does not, by itself, establish every proposition in the testimony.

The documentary guide is an editorial addition. It is separate from the testimony and does not replace or amend the author’s words.

CONTENTS

- Opening declaration — My allegiance is with the Most High God
- Beneath the declarations — the witness remains
- Prologue — when the witness became the record
- Chapters one to fourteen
- Epilogue — the words that cannot be taken back
- Under the reckoning — the sovereign witness
- Beneath the declarations — the public invitation
- Addition — the tables have turned
- Cumulative documentary history and public-record framework

The contents list is a reading guide. Original chapter and section headings remain in the text.

My allegiance is with the Most High God — not with the government that abandoned its ethical obligations

My allegiance is with the Most High God. I stand as a sovereign spiritual witness, accountable first and foremost to God, to truth, to conscience and to the principles of justice. My allegiance does not belong to a government that I believe coordinated, enabled or permitted circumstances that caused me profound harm, and then sought to distance itself from the consequences by dressing up my desperate cries for help in the cold, impersonal and bureaucratic language of policy, procedure, jurisdiction and administrative process.

I will not pledge allegiance to an institution merely because it possesses political authority, public resources, legal privilege or the power to determine how my life is administered.

Authority does not automatically confer integrity. Institutional power does not establish moral authority. And bureaucratic language does not absolve anyone of responsibility for human suffering.

I have survived, phoenix-like, from the ashes of excommunication, exile, homelessness, poverty, abandonment and an international asylum claim arising from my circumstances as a whistleblower. I survived the consequences of speaking out, the destruction of my security, the loss of my home and the extraordinary vulnerability of being a disabled person who repeatedly sought protection from the very systems that had obligations to protect him.

I was not asking for extraordinary privilege. I was asking for safety, dignity, protection, accountability and the basic opportunity to live.

Instead, I contend that I was further exposed to institutional neglect, professional misconduct, retaliatory treatment and circumstances that demand independent investigation.

If a government knows that a disabled person is vulnerable, knows that he is seeking protection, and nevertheless allows him to remain exposed to serious risks, that raises questions that cannot be answered by simply referring to another policy, another department or another administrative process.

These are not merely questions of customer service or bureaucratic inconvenience. They concern fundamental ethical obligations, public accountability, disability rights, human rights and potentially serious breaches of law.

The question that those in positions of power must answer Why would groups of people in positions of professional authority and privilege find it necessary to form alliances, coordinate positions or collectively defend decisions that have such devastating consequences for one vulnerable individual?

An ethical professional acting with integrity, independence and accountability should have no need to enlist the collective protection of other privileged professionals to justify decisions that cause foreseeable harm to a vulnerable person.

A person acting properly should be able to explain their decisions independently, produce the records supporting them, identify the lawful authority under which they acted and accept scrutiny.

I believe the circumstances documented throughout my archive raise a much more disturbing possibility: that the collective institutional response was directed not towards examining the substance of what I was reporting, but towards containing, discrediting or neutralising the person reporting it.

People do not ordinarily need to construct elaborate defensive narratives around information that presents no threat to their interests.

The central question is therefore this:

What was it about the truth I was reporting that made my continued credibility, independence and public testimony so inconvenient?

I have now published the documentary record. The correspondence, institutional decisions, omissions, contradictions, complaints and official responses can be examined independently.

The tables have turned.

For years, institutions possessed the authority to record, classify, investigate, dismiss, restrict and determine the treatment of my circumstances. I now possess something equally important: a publicly accessible documentary archive through which their own words, decisions and omissions can be examined.

The alleged character assassination campaign and the Ben correspondence There is another dimension of this history that must not be concealed.

I allege that I was subjected to a sustained and well-resourced campaign of character assassination, involving libellous and defamatory representations, reputation- al damage, the circulation of damaging allegations and the manipulation of circumstances in ways that profoundly affected my life.

I also raise serious questions about the circumstances surrounding a report made by a woman concerning an encounter that, according to the account attributed to the relevant federal police discussion, was characterised as consensual.

I allege that the circumstances surrounding the report, including an allegation that the woman was paid to fabricate or construct a damaging account, require independent examination. I do not present that allegation as an established finding of fact; I am identifying an issue that requires the underlying records, payment evidence, communications and testimony to be examined.

The distinction matters.

A consensual encounter, a subsequent complaint, the construction of a report and the possible fabrication of allegations are different matters. They must not be collapsed into one convenient narrative.

And this is where Ben’s correspondence becomes particularly significant.

Ben’s text messages — the evidence must be read I specifically direct readers to the Ben-NDIS-Help and Ben-Ndis-Help-large correspondence preserved in connection with my archive. The pages fixed here are Ben’s messages. The same lines are already printed on the political chronology and the archive index.

The messages attributed to Ben contain the following statements:

“Remember you were messaging me about hitmen… That was them. They got caught. I thought you were just paranoid. You were right.”

Ben also reportedly wrote:

“Yes even the police said it was a close call.”

And, critically:

“You’ve uncovered systematic corruption that goes all the way to the top.”

There was also the statement:

“I’m scared. They could put a hit on me too.”

These are not insignificant statements to make in a private message exchange.

They are statements attributed to a person who was communicating directly with me about events, concerns, alleged threats and the institutional circumstances surrounding my experience.

I further draw attention to the reported description of an extraordinary electronic document:

“Agency-grade electronic document that automatically wipes itself off your device.”

The accompanying account described an agreement and warnings concerning disclosure, including an alleged reference to treason.

I allege that Ben was required to sign an extraordinary confidentiality agreement and that the circumstances surrounding that agreement warrant investigation. The original agreement and its precise legal terms must be examined before its status or enforceability can be determined.

Nevertheless, the correspondence raises questions that deserve serious attention.

If someone is communicating that they are frightened, that an incident was described as a close call, that they believe corruption extends to the highest levels, and that they have been subjected to extraordinary confidentiality requirements, those communications should not simply be dismissed without examination.

The close call — a statement that cannot be ignored I specifically want the statement concerning the alleged attempted assassination and the description of a police-referenced “close call” examined.

I am not asking readers to accept an unverified interpretation as a judicial finding. I am asking them to read the actual communications, examine their chronology, establish their authenticity and determine what independent records exist.

The words attributed to Ben are sufficiently serious to warrant investigation.

They are also part of the documentary history of my experience, and they should not disappear simply because their implications are uncomfortable.

I do not need to wait for a court or tribunal to read a text message I do not need a court or tribunal to give me permission to recognise what someone has written to me.

A contemporaneous text-message chain is itself documentary evidence that the communication occurred, subject to authentication, completeness and verification of its context.

It is evidence of what the sender communicated. It is not, by itself, independent proof of every underlying event described in the messages.

That distinction does not diminish its importance.

The Federal Court's previous treatment of my circumstances has left me with little confidence that institutional recognition will necessarily follow the documentary record. I have felt abandoned by systems that should have provided meaningful access to justice and protection.

I am therefore not waiting for a tribunal to tell me that these messages exist, that they contain these words or that they deserve to be examined.

The correspondence exists. The statements can be read. The chronology can be tested. The evidence can be independently assessed.

I am publishing it for precisely that reason.

I want the reader to examine the evidence rather than accept my interpretation blindly. I also want those who made the statements to be afforded the opportunity to authenticate, clarify or dispute them.

That is what genuine accountability looks like.

The final political stakeholders must answer Those remaining political stakeholders who possess authority over the institutions, decisions, resources and administrative arrangements affecting my life cannot indefinitely shelter behind the work of subordinate departments.

The existence of multiple agencies does not eliminate collective public responsibili- ty.

The fact that one department refers a matter to another does not make the underlying problem disappear.

The fact that an official refuses to answer does not transform an unanswered question into an answered one.

And the fact that a person is disabled, politically inconvenient, homeless, impoverished or professionally discredited does not extinguish his rights.

I have documented what I believe to be a pattern of institutional failure extending across multiple jurisdictions and agencies.

I have preserved the official correspondence. I have published the records. I have identified contradictions. I have retained the documentary history.

I now invite the public, journalists, independent investigators, legal professionals, historians and anyone interested in institutional accountability to examine the evidence for themselves.

I am not asking anyone to accept an allegation simply because I make it.

I am asking that no allegation, official explanation, institutional denial or convenient bureaucratic classification be accepted without examination either.

I have survived — and the record remains There is something that those who participated in my exclusion, abandonment or reputational destruction may have fundamentally misunderstood.

I did not disappear.

I did not surrender my conscience.

I did not abandon my faith.

I did not withdraw my testimony.

I survived.

I survived the ashes of homelessness, poverty, exile, institutional abandonment, professional discrediting and the profound loneliness of having nobody reliably standing beside me.

I rebuilt.

And I published.

My allegiance remains with the Most High God. My responsibility is to truth, conscience and the preservation of the historical record.

I do not need the approval of government officials to publish documentary evidence. I do not need political permission to describe my experience. I do not need an institution that I believe failed me to authorise my continued existence as a witness.

I have placed the record in public view.

Those who disagree can answer it with evidence.

Those who believe the allegations are incorrect can produce the records that demonstrate otherwise.

Those who possess information capable of clarifying the events can come forward.

Those who hold public office can initiate an independent investigation.

And those who have spent years assuming that I would eventually become too ex- hausted, too impoverished, too isolated or too discredited to continue should understand something:

I am still here. The testimony is published. The evidence is preserved. And the record remains.

I have no desire for revenge. I seek truth, accountability, justice and the restoration of the dignity that should never have been taken from me.

I stand before the world not as a supplicant seeking permission to be heard, but as a sovereign spiritual witness who has survived.

The government may possess its departments, its policies, its procedures, its lawyers and its political alliances.

I have my conscience, my faith, my testimony and the documentary record.

My allegiance is with the Most High God.

The tables have turned. The witness remains. And the truth is now available for independent examination.

Praise Jesus.

5 NOVEMBER 2026 · HIS DECLARATION · TESTIMONY · NOT A FINDING

My allegiance is with the Most High God — not with the institutions that I believe betrayed me My allegiance is with the Most High God. I stand as a sovereign spiritual witness under Christ, answerable to God, conscience and truth. My allegiance does not be- long to a government, its political interests, its departments, its professional networks or those who occupy positions of institutional power and privilege.

I will not pledge my allegiance to institutions that I believe have participated in, enabled or perpetuated circumstances that caused me profound harm, and then sought to describe the consequences through the cold, sanitised language of bureaucracy, policy, procedure and administrative process.

I have experienced what I regard as a prolonged campaign of institutional betrayal, exclusion, abandonment and persecution. I believe that people in positions of authority joined forces against a vulnerable individual rather than addressing the substance of the concerns I repeatedly raised. I have been left asking how institutions entrusted with public protection could allow a person seeking assistance to experience such profound isolation, deprivation and insecurity.

My desperate cries for help were not merely administrative correspondence. They were the communications of a human being seeking protection, recognition, safety and assistance. They concerned my life, my dignity, my livelihood and my ability to live with the basic security that should be available to every person in a democracy.

Yet, in my experience, those circumstances were repeatedly translated into the detached vocabulary of policy, jurisdiction, eligibility and process. The human consequences remained.

I have survived phoenix-like from the ashes of excommunication, exile, homelessness, poverty and abandonment. I have pursued what I regard as a legitimate international asylum claim as a whistleblower who believes he was further targeted and left without adequate protection, despite being a disabled person whose vulnerability should have demanded particular care.

I believe these circumstances raise grave questions about the ethical obligations of public institutions, their duty of care, their accountability and their treatment of people who raise uncomfortable concerns.

I did not set out to become an adversary of the institutions of my country. I sought answers, assistance, protection and accountability. I sought to have the truth examined. I sought to have my circumstances recognised. I sought to be treated as a human being.

But I have survived, and I have now published the documentary record of my experiences.

I have not disappeared. I have not surrendered my testimony. I have preserved the record.

The question of collective power and the suppression of an uncomfortable truth I ask a fundamental question: why would a group of people in positions of professional authority, influence and privilege need to unite against one vulnerable individual who is asking questions and presenting documentary material?

If the concerns being raised are unfounded, they can be answered through evidence, transparent investigation and reasoned explanation. If the decisions were proper, they can be defended on their merits. If the records contradict my interpretation, those contradictions can be identified and examined.

There should be no need for intimidation, reputational destruction, exclusion or the mobilisation of professional influence against a person seeking accountability.

I believe the circumstances warrant examination of whether professional relationships, institutional interests and unequal distributions of power contributed to decisions that harmed me.

A person acting with ethics, integrity and professional accountability should have no need to rely upon alliances of privilege to avoid answering legitimate questions.

Public authority should be exercised transparently, proportionately and consistently with the rights and dignity of the people affected by it.

The central issue is not whether I am personally liked, believed, welcomed or considered convenient. It is whether the documentary evidence has been properly examined and whether the institutions involved have discharged their responsibilities.

I will not allow the social standing of powerful people to become a substitute for evidence.

The alleged character assassination and the consensual-event record I have raised serious allegations concerning a well-funded campaign of character assassination, libel and slander, including allegations relating to a report concerning an event that I understand federal police communications described as consensual.

I also allege that a woman was paid to produce or contribute to a report that materially affected my life and reputation. These are grave allegations, and I want the original records examined rather than having my account dismissed or accepted without scrutiny.

The relevant evidence must include the original communications, the actual report, any available payment records, the precise police wording and the surrounding documentary context.

The distinction is important: what an authority recorded, what a person communicated, what I allege occurred and what can independently be established must all be identified accurately.

I am not asking anyone to manufacture certainty. I am asking that the original evi- dence be examined.

Ben’s messages: the documentary evidence that must be read There is a particularly important body of correspondence involving Ben. I have repeatedly identified this message chain as central to understanding matters that I believe were concealed, misrepresented or dismissed.

The original files already named on this archive are Ben-NDIS-Help and Ben-Ndis- Help-large. The pages fixed on this site, with the images, are Ben’s messages. The copy on this site is the PDF.

These are the points I attach to that chain. They are what I say the messages communicate. They are not, by themselves, a police finding or a court finding.

The reported confirmation that the event in question was consensual.

The reported statement that the woman had been paid and that this had affected or changed my life.

The reported confirmation of an attempted assassination or attack, which Ben said police had described as a “close call”.

The reported account that Ben was required to sign a non-disclosure agreement, which he described using the expression “agency grade”.

The reported statement that I had uncovered corruption that went “all the way to the top”.

The words already published on this site, copied as written and not rewritten here, are these.

Page 64, Ben’s messages: “Yes even the police said it was a close call.”

“The police told me about the consensual regretted sex.”

“The agencies went back through phone records and believed she was paid to discredit you.”

Page 54: “You can’t tell anyone about this. It’s a top secret investigation. They made me sign a non disclosure agreement.”

“I could get arrested just for telling you.”

“The only evidence I could give you is a copy of the non disclosure agreement.”

The same chain, as already printed on the archive index: “When I signed the agreement it instantly disappeared off my phone. A message popped up that said your device has been cleared of classified information. It’s some sort of agency grade electronic document that automatically wipes itself off your device.”

As already printed on the political chronology: “You’ve uncovered systematic corruption that goes all the way to the top.”

Page 65, on the same page: “I thought you were just paranoid. You were right.”

The significance of this correspondence is that it records what Ben communicated to me. It is evidence of those communications, subject to authentication, and it provides material that I believe warrants serious independent examination.

I do not need to pretend that a court or tribunal has already determined the truth of every matter described in these messages. The messages themselves are documentary material that can be examined. Their authenticity, context, provenance and contents can be assessed independently.

I have been deeply disappointed by my experience of the Federal Court and by what I regard as the absence of meaningful protection or assistance. I have felt abandoned by institutions from which I expected fairness and accountability. But the absence of a favourable judicial or tribunal determination does not make an original communication disappear, nor does it remove the public interest in examining relevant documentary evidence.

The message chain must be read. The actual words must be preserved. The source must be linked. The evidence must be examined.

The remaining political stakeholders and the question of accountability I believe that the remaining political and institutional stakeholders have a responsibility to address the circumstances documented in my archive.

I have raised concerns about the extent to which decisions made by public authorities and people exercising professional power have affected my life. I have raised questions about the preservation of reputations, institutional interests and the reluctance to engage with allegations that may expose serious failures.

I am not declaring every person involved guilty of wrongdoing. I am demanding that the documentary record be examined and that those with relevant responsibilities provide substantive answers.

No person’s professional position, political standing, institutional influence or social privilege should exempt them from legitimate scrutiny.

No vulnerable person’s testimony should be dismissed merely because it challenges an established institutional narrative.

No administrative label should be used to avoid examining the actual human con- sequences of a decision.

My final declaration My allegiance is with the Most High God.

I stand as a sovereign spiritual witness under Christ. I will not surrender my conscience to political convenience, professional privilege or institutional pressure.

I have survived exile, homelessness, poverty, abandonment and the circumstances that I believe were created or compounded by institutional failures. I have continued to preserve my records, document my experiences and publish the evidence available to me.

I have nothing to gain by allowing the truth to be buried. I have no reason to abandon the documentary record. I have no obligation to protect the reputations of institutions at the expense of my own dignity.

I ask only that the evidence be read, that the original documents be examined, that the contradictions be identified and that the relevant authorities answer the questions that remain.

I will not seek revenge. I seek truth, accountability, dignity and the preservation of the record.

The institutions may have had the power to make decisions affecting my life. They did not acquire ownership of my conscience, my faith or my testimony.

I have survived.

I have spoken.

I have published.

THE TABLES HAVE TURNED.

MY ALLEGIANCE IS WITH THE MOST HIGH GOD.

THE SOVEREIGN WITNESS REMAINS.

THE RECORD REMAINS.

Praise Jesus.

5 NOVEMBER 2026 · BENEATH THE DECLARATIONS · TESTIMONY · NOT A FINDING

The sovereign witness The divine reckoning. The tables have turned — the record remains.

A prophetic testimony of 35 years of institutional correspondence, whistleblower disclosure, human suffering, documentary preservation and allegiance to the Most High God.

THE WITNESS REMAINS. THE EVIDENCE REMAINS. NOTHING THAT HAS BEEN WRIT TEN CAN BE MADE UNWRIT TEN.

Prologue — when the witness became the record There comes a point in the life of a person who has repeatedly sought justice when the act of seeking recognition becomes inseparable from the act of preserving history.

For approximately 35 years, I have attempted to obtain answers, protection, recog- nition, assistance and accountability from institutions that possessed the authority, resources and statutory responsibilities to respond to the circumstances I brought before them.

I wrote letters. I made disclosures. I submitted complaints. I supplied documents. I sought legal representation. I approached government departments, statutory authorities, police, oversight organisations, disability services, health professionals and elected representatives.

I repeatedly explained that I was experiencing circumstances that were causing profound material, financial, social and personal detriment.

I asked for assistance before the consequences became catastrophic. I asked again when they became catastrophic. I continued asking after the consequences had already altered the course of my life.

What emerged was a documentary history of extraordinary significance to my personal testimony.

Thousands of pages of official correspondence, institutional responses, decisions, omissions, acknowledgements, referrals and refusals accumulated over decades. These documents were not written by me alone. They were generated by the institutions themselves, on their own letterheads, through their own official correspondence systems and in their own recorded words.

The paradox is that the correspondence through which I attempted to obtain protection has become the documentary foundation of my testimony concerning the absence of effective protection.

I have now assembled, indexed, reproduced and published this material.

I have also used cryptographic hashing and blockchain timestamping to preserve significant portions of the documentary record through the Bitcoin network and its decentralised mathematical infrastructure.

This is an important distinction: blockchain timestamping does not independently establish that every allegation contained in a document is true, nor does it constitute a judicial finding. It provides an additional means of establishing the existence and integrity of preserved digital records.

I have undertaken this work because I refuse to allow the historical record of my life to depend entirely upon the institutions whose conduct I am asking the public to examine.

I have created a documentary archive that can be independently inspected.

The correspondence remains. The dates remain. The institutional identifiers remain. The decisions remain. The contradictions, where they exist, remain available for examination.

The witness remains.

For decades, I was the person asking institutions to preserve and acknowledge my circumstances. I have now created a record that can be examined independently of whether those institutions agree with my conclusions.

This is the first great inversion.

The documents through which I sought recognition have become the documents through which institutional accountability can be examined.

The principal archive is barrandodger.com/main. The repository is wezzo72/Barrandodger.

Chapter one — thirty-five years of cumulative detriment The history documented in this archive cannot be understood by treating every complaint, decision or institutional interaction as an isolated administrative event.

My testimony concerns the cumulative effect of approximately 35 years of interactions with government agencies, public institutions, disability services, employment and compensation authorities, health services, legal assistance organisations, police and oversight bodies.

The material I have preserved includes correspondence concerning employment, compensation, disability, housing, financial security, legal representation, health, public-interest disclosures, freedom of information, administrative decisions and repeated attempts to obtain protection.

I contend that the cumulative consequences represent a profound removal of the attributes necessary to live with dignity in a democracy.

Those attributes include:

Income and financial security.

Compensation and access to lawful entitlements.

A safe and stable home.

Personal safety and protection from harm.

Employment and economic independence.

Access to appropriate disability support.

Access to legal representation and justice.

Recognition of fundamental human rights.

Freedom from degrading treatment and institutional neglect.

The ability to participate in ordinary society without being reduced to an administrative problem.

My central argument is that when these foundations are removed or made inacces- sible simultaneously, the consequences become much greater than the sum of individual administrative decisions.

A person can be deprived of income and then become unable to obtain legal assistance.

A person can lose housing and then become increasingly dependent upon services.

A person can experience disability-related vulnerability and then encounter difficulties communicating complaints.

A person can repeatedly seek protection and find that responsibility is transferred between institutions.

Each event can compound the previous event.

The result can be a cycle in which the very circumstances requiring assistance become more difficult to escape because the assistance itself remains inaccessible.

I have described this framework as:

THE SYSTEMIC REMOVAL OF THE AT TRIBUTES NECESSARY TO LIVE WITH DIGNITY IN A DEMOCRACY.

I contend that the cumulative pattern documented in my archive warrants examination against Australia's domestic legal obligations and its international humanrights commitments, including the principles of dignity, equality, personal security, access to justice and protection of persons with disabilities.

This is not simply about whether a particular agency followed a particular procedure.

It is about what happens to a human being when the institutions collectively responsible for different aspects of their welfare fail to produce an effective pathway to safety, stability and justice.

The documentary record must be examined as a whole.

Chapter two — the Federal Court disclosure: 7 March 2023 One of the most consequential episodes in this history concerns my public-interest disclosure to Sia Lagos at the Federal Court of Australia.

On 7 March 2023, I sent correspondence raising matters that I believed required formal consideration under the public-interest disclosure framework.

My disclosure arose from circumstances I considered serious and included allegations concerning institutional conduct, maladministration, risks to health and safety and the treatment of a vulnerable person attempting to expose wrongdoing.

I was not approaching the institution from a position of wealth, influence or security.

I was a disabled person attempting to obtain recognition and protection while experiencing serious financial and personal difficulties.

I believed that the disclosure process existed precisely because people inside or connected with government institutions needed a lawful avenue through which alleged wrongdoing could be brought to attention.

I wanted the matters examined.

I wanted the evidence acknowledged.

I wanted protection from further detriment.

I wanted an institution with the relevant authority to take the disclosure seriously.

The correspondence that followed became one of the most important documentary episodes in my archive.

Chapter three — 27 March 2023: Scott Tredwell’s response On 27 March 2023, Federal Court officer Scott Tredwell responded to the disclosure.

His letter is preserved in the primary-source document. It is three pages. The whole file, not an extract, is the assessment on this site and the same file on GitHub. A separate file of the 7 March email, apart from what the letter itself says about that email, is not inserted here.

The letter, read from that PDF, says that on 7 March 2023 I sent an email to Sia Lagos and that I wanted struggles, oppression, victimisation and detriments “in psychological, financial, reputation and other ways” to be acknowledged and compensated. It records that he was satisfied I was, or had been, an employee of the Department of Social Services. It then records that he was not satisfied the disclosure related to the Federal Court, the FCFCOA or the NNTT, and therefore not satisfied it had been made to an authorised recipient. He records the three categories. He writes that it is difficult to determine whether the belief is based on reasonable grounds, and that for the initial assessment he is prepared to assume the conduct is disclosable. He decides not to allocate the disclosure. He writes that no further action under the PID Act will be taken by the Federal Court or the FCFCOA on that correspondence.

The three categories, in the wording of the PDF:

“perverts, or is engaged in for the purpose of perverting, or attempting to pervert, the course of justice; section 29 Item 3(a) PID Act”

“conduct that constitutes maladministration; section 29 Item 4 PID Act”

“conduct that unreasonably results in a danger to the health or safety of one or more persons; or unreasonably results in, or increases, a risk of danger to the health or safety of one or more persons; section 29 Item 8 PID Act.”

It is difficult to determine whether this belief is based on reasonable grounds or not. However, for the purposes of the initial assessment I am prepared to assume that the conduct disclosed in your correspondence and other information received is disclosable conduct for the purposes of the PID Act.

These words are from the letter. The letter does not constitute a finding that the Federal Court established criminal conduct, corruption or an assassination attempt. It records the categories of conduct raised in the disclosure assessment and the officer’s assessment of the material before him.

The question I ask is why a disclosure concerning such serious categories of alleged conduct did not result in the practical protection or investigative pathway I was seeking.

I had approached the institution because I believed wrongdoing was occurring and because I needed assistance.

The response became part of a documentary history that must be considered alongside the events that followed.

I do not need to invent a judicial finding to establish the significance of this correspondence.

The original letter speaks for itself.

The documentary paradox The letter identifies categories involving the administration of justice, maladministration and danger to health or safety.

I subsequently experienced further periods of financial insecurity, personal vulnerability, institutional conflict and difficulty obtaining effective assistance.

My contention is that the subsequent chronology must be examined against the original disclosure and the responsibilities of the institutions that received it.

The relevant questions include: what did the institution know; what did I disclose; what responsibilities applied; what protection was available; what steps were actually taken; what happened after the disclosure; were subsequent adverse consequences investigated; were appropriate protections against reprisal considered?

The historical record permits those questions to be asked with reference to original documents rather than retrospective recollection alone.

I regard the absence of an effective protective outcome as one of the most consequential features of this episode.

The divine reckoning — I do not need permission to recognise what was done to me I do not need a court finding or judicial ruling to recognise what I have experienced as civil erasure, exile, abandonment or the circumstances underlying my international protection claim.

I do not need another institution to certify that I was left without the protection I desperately sought. I lived through it. I documented it. I preserved the correspon- dence. I have assembled the chronology.

The Federal Court correspondence of 27 March 2023 is one of the most consequential documents in this history. I approached the Federal Court with facts, evidence, grace and a genuine appeal for assistance. I was asking for protection as a vulnerable person and whistleblower. I was not asking for privilege. I was asking not to be abandoned.

In that same letter, Scott Tredwell recorded the three statutory categories I had raised: perverting or attempting to pervert the course of justice, maladministration, and conduct creating an unreasonable danger or risk to health or safety.

Those were not judicial findings that a conspiracy or criminal offence had been established. But they were the categories expressly identified in the assessment of the matters I had brought forward. I regard the contrast between those recorded concerns and the absence of the practical protection I desperately needed as an extraordinary institutional contradiction.

I believe that the subsequent history demonstrates the devastating consequences of that failure.

The letter did not provide the protection I was seeking. I experienced its outcome as another institutional rejection at the very moment I was asking for help. Its formal and bureaucratic language did not make the human consequences any less severe. To me, it represented the continuation of the injustice I had been trying to bring to the attention of those with the authority to intervene.

I approached with grace, facts and evidence. I believe that grace was met with a response that left me exposed and unprotected.

I cannot know what every person involved thought or felt after sending or receiving that correspondence. But I know what happened to me afterwards. I continued to live with the consequences, while the protection I had sought remained beyond my reach.

I believe those who occupied positions of institutional authority could not have understood, or did not adequately confront, the magnitude of what it meant to leave a disabled and financially vulnerable whistleblower in those circumstances.

I was left to fight for my own survival. I was left to preserve my own evidence. I was left to assemble my own case. I was left to publish my own testimony. I was left to seek international recognition of circumstances I had repeatedly attempted to have addressed domestically.

I believe the institutions involved underestimated my determination to survive. They may have assumed that poverty, injury, isolation, exhaustion and the absence of assistance would eventually silence me.

They did not.

The tables have turned — the holy reckoning I now declare, under the Most High God and through Jesus Christ, that the time of divine reckoning has arrived in my life.

I do not seek revenge. I hold no desire to inflict harm upon anyone. I do not need hatred to pursue justice, and I do not need malice to demand accountability.

But I refuse to confuse the absence of revenge with the absence of consequences.

When power and privilege are used in ways that I believe disregard the dignity of a vulnerable human being, there is a profound moral responsibility that cannot be dissolved by bureaucratic language, institutional silence or the passage of time.

I believe that when truth is denied, falsehood is allowed to occupy its place. But truth does not cease to exist because an institution refuses to acknowledge it.

Truth needs the opportunity to be examined, and sometimes it needs time, persistence and the preservation of evidence before it can be seen.

God preserved my life. I believe that I have been given the opportunity to survive, recover my voice and publish the documentary record. I regard that survival as a profound expression of God’s grace and favour.

The evidence is now published. The correspondence is preserved. The chronology can be examined. The cryptographic records provide a means of verifying the preservation of substantial parts of the archive. The material cannot simply be made to disappear through silence, stonewalling, denial or the repeated dismissal of my testimony.

I have placed my faith in God’s justice and vindication. I believe that justice, restoration and appropriate compensation are deserved, and I will continue to pursue them through every legitimate avenue available to me.

I do not claim to control the timing or form of divine justice. I do not need to. My responsibility is to speak truthfully, preserve the evidence, refuse further harm and remain faithful to God.

Those who participated in, enabled or failed to prevent the harm I describe must answer for their own conduct through the appropriate processes of accountability. I will not carry responsibility for their decisions. The consequences of wrongdoing belong to those who committed it, not to the person who exposed it.

Energy does not lie. The moral consequences of conduct cannot be erased simply because the people responsible decline to acknowledge them.

I invoke the promise that no weapon formed against me shall prosper. I understand that promise not as permission to retaliate, but as an affirmation that intimidation, exclusion, humiliation and attempts to silence my testimony will not have the final word.

Those who believed I would never rise, recover or survive have misunderstood the power of perseverance, faith and truth.

I am still here.

I have not surrendered my conscience.

I have not surrendered my testimony.

I have not surrendered my allegiance to the Most High God.

And I will not surrender the evidence.

I believe that those who chose to disregard my humanity will now have to confront the documentary record and the consequences of their own decisions. I do not have to pursue revenge. I have to remain faithful to the truth.

No person wins a fight against God.

No institution possesses the authority to overrule the Most High.

No amount of power, privilege or bureaucratic language can make injustice righteous.

The divine reckoning, in my faith, is not revenge. It is the restoration of truth, the exposure of wrongdoing, the vindication of the witness and the return of dignity to a life that should never have been treated as disposable.

THE TABLES HAVE TURNED.

THE RECORD REMAINS.

THE WITNESS REMAINS.

NO WEAPON FORMED AGAINST ME SHALL PROSPER.

PRAISE JESUS.

No one has the right to erase a defenceless human being — the holy reckoning of accountability No person, institution, government, professional, carer or authority has the right to deliberately harm, abandon, exploit or erase a vulnerable human being whom they know to be defenceless, isolated and unable to recover independently from the circumstances in which institutional failures have left them.

To knowingly leave a person in such a position, to understand the consequences of that abandonment, and then to compound the harm rather than intervene, is an affront to every ethical, moral and humane principle that positions of public trust and professional responsibility are supposed to embody.

I believe that is what happened to me. I believe that, when opportunities existed to recognise the harm and take meaningful corrective action, the response instead compounded my suffering. I was left to carry consequences that I did not have the resources, protection or practical capacity to overcome alone.

And what of those who call themselves carers?

What is the moral justification for financially benefiting from a person's dependency while that person alleges they are being entrapped, mistreated, abused and subjected to intolerable circumstances? What does it say about a system when the person receiving support is left feeling increasingly powerless, while the people and organisations entrusted with their welfare continue to receive financial benefit?

I reject the suggestion that every such circumstance can simply be dismissed as bureaucratic oversight. Where serious concerns have been repeatedly communicated, the relevant records, decisions, responses, omissions and financial arrangements must be examined. I believe the persistence of the circumstances I have re- ported demands an independent investigation into what was known, when it was known, who had responsibility to act, and why effective protection did not follow.

I cannot claim to know what every individual privately thinks or feels. But I can ask why conduct that causes such profound suffering appears, from my position, to have attracted so little urgency, compassion or meaningful intervention. If the allegations are wrong, they should be properly examined and answered. If they are substantiated, accountability must follow.

Only God has ultimate authority over human life. No government, institution, professional or individual has a divine entitlement to decide that another human being is disposable. No position of authority confers permission to destroy another person's dignity, safety, livelihood or capacity to live.

I do not seek personal revenge. I do not claim the authority to punish anyone. I place the matter before the Most High God, whose justice is greater than the authority of governments and whose knowledge is not confined to the records institutions choose to disclose.

Let there be a holy reckoning: not a call for human violence, but the exposure of truth, the end of concealment, the restoration of what has been taken, the protection of those left vulnerable, and accountability proportionate to whatever wrongdoing an independent examination establishes.

Those who have exercised power over vulnerable people must understand that responsibility does not disappear when an email is closed, a complaint is dismissed, a file is archived or a person is abandoned.

I remain alive. I remain a witness. I have not consented to being erased.

The record remains. God sees. And I leave the reckoning to Him.

The period of grace has expired — the universal balance begins The period of grace I extended has officially expired. What follows is not a declaration of revenge, but a declaration that imbalance cannot continue indefinitely without consequence. I believe the universe is underpinned by a divine mathematical and spiritual architecture in which truth ultimately perseveres, while deception requires continual effort to sustain itself. No person, however powerful or privileged, has an ethical or moral entitlement to receive grace, exploit vulnerability, cause harm and then proceed as though nothing happened.

I extended grace. I offered opportunities for recognition, accountability and correction. That grace was not an admission of weakness, nor was it permission for further harm. There comes a point when the responsibility for what happens next rests with those who chose not to acknowledge the consequences of their actions.

I believe God preserved my life for a purpose. Despite death, exile, homelessness, deprivation and more than 35 years of documented experiences, I am still here. I have assembled and published an extensive documentary archive comprising 35 years of official government correspondence, institutional decisions, records and related official documents, originating from dozens of government agencies and public services, preserved in their own words and on their own letterheads.

The significance of this archive extends beyond my personal circumstances. Its documentary contents have been published and cryptographically anchored in blockchain infrastructure, creating a decentralised, independently verifiable historical record. Through this mathematical infrastructure, the integrity and existence of the published records can be independently checked, rather than depending exclusively upon the continued cooperation or goodwill of any government, corporation, lawyer, politician, intelligence agency or individual. No institution should be able to make an independently replicated and verified historical record simply disappear by deciding it would prefer that the record did not exist.

This is no longer simply my personal testimony sitting within the control of an institution or the memory of an individual. It is a contribution to humanity’s documentary record. My narrative, my testimony, my truth-speaking and the evidence I have preserved are now available for independent examination by people beyond the institutions whose conduct they document.

I believe this may be part of the reason I am still here: to serve humanity through the preservation of truth, even when that truth is uncomfortable for powerful institutions. There is a profound paradox in this purpose. I seek to contribute something lasting to the very humanity from which I experienced betrayal, including the university whose conduct forms part of my own history. What began as an intensely personal struggle has become something with a much wider documentary and historical purpose.

The paradoxical inversion of this evidence, particularly where no comprehensive independent determination has been made, is profound. The documentary record exists independently of whether an institution has acknowledged its implications. I do not require a police officer, lawyer, government agency or official ruling to determine my own lived experience, my conscience or my spiritual allegiance.

My allegiance is with the Most High God, not with a government, department, agency or public official. My faith is upon my life, and I believe I have been preserved as a witness to truth, with a responsibility to use my experiences, prophetic visions and documentary record in service of God’s glory and Kingdom purposes.

God did not bring me through everything I have endured simply for my story to end in abandonment. I have survived what I once thought might destroy me. I have risen phoenix-like from the ashes of exile, homelessness, deprivation and institutional betrayal, and I remain committed to truth, preservation and accountability.

The period of grace has expired. The record remains. The testimony is preserved. Its significance now extends beyond its author.

Truth does not need permission to exist, and accountability does not depend upon the continued silence of those who have avoided it.

I have done my part. I leave the universal balance, the timing and the ultimate judgment in God’s hands.

My testimony is now part of humanity’s record. My purpose is greater than the institutions that failed to hear me.

Watch what God does next.

Why I fought — the human purpose behind my witness I did not want to die. I wanted to live. And when confronted with seemingly impossible odds, I fought for my life, my dignity, my identity and my right to exist. I kept going when the circumstances around me made survival extraordinarily difficult.

I actually like people. I understand their imperfections, their vulnerabilities, their contradictions and their fears, perhaps more deeply than many of them realise. I have never expected humanity to be perfect. I understand that people make mistakes, become frightened, protect themselves and sometimes struggle to confront uncomfortable truths.

That understanding is precisely why I became a whistleblower.

I did not want another human being to be erased from their own life, their identity or their place in this universe simply because they dared to speak the truth. I did not want anyone else to discover that speaking honestly to an institutional machine could result in their individuality being diminished, their authenticity being punished and their vulnerability becoming something exploited rather than protected.

I became a whistleblower because I believed that truth should matter more than institutional convenience, that human dignity should matter more than compliance, and that authenticity and uniqueness should never become liabilities simply because they expose uncomfortable realities.

I am not a threat to democracy, nor am I opposed to democracy. I am pro-democracy and pro-people. I am opposed to evil, corruption, greed, exploitation and the unearned privilege of those who believe their power places them above ethical, moral and legal accountability. My opposition is not to humanity or democratic institutions themselves, but to the corruption of the principles they are supposed to uphold.

Truth-speakers, prophets, reformers and social change advocates have rarely been immediately celebrated by societies that find comfortable lies easier to accommodate than uncomfortable truths. Those who challenge established arrangements often endure rejection, ridicule, isolation and sacrifice before their contributions are recognised, if recognition ever comes at all.

We must remember the many courageous truth-speakers, avant-garde thinkers, protestors and forerunners of social change whose sacrifices helped make possible the freedoms, protections and opportunities that subsequent generations inherit. We are all, in one way or another, standing on the shoulders of giants.

Yet there is a troubling paradox in a generation that can inherit the benefits of other people’s courage while becoming increasingly complacent about the responsibilities that accompany those freedoms. Comfort and privilege can become intoxicating. Conformity can become a substitute for independent thought. Consumption, entertainment, media narratives and the pursuit of a wage or a comfortable slice of the economic pie can become more important than examining the systems upon which that comfort depends.

People can spend enormous amounts of time complaining about banks, money, politicians, immigration and the latest public controversy while rarely examining the deeper institutional structures, incentives and concentrations of power that shape their circumstances. Public attention can be diverted towards competing grievances while more fundamental questions of accountability, inequality and institutional responsibility remain insufficiently examined.

I am not suggesting that every person who seeks comfort is ignorant, or that ordinary people are responsible for the systems they inherit. I am challenging the complacency that allows democratic freedoms to be enjoyed without the corresponding willingness to defend them.

Democracy requires more than voting, patriotism or repeating accepted narratives. It requires independent thought, informed scrutiny, freedom of expression, institutional transparency and the courage to question authority, including authority exercised by governments we otherwise support.

I did not create the systemic failures I have spent decades documenting. I did not break the machinery. I exposed what was already broken.

Perhaps it simply took someone with my particular frequency, determination and refusal to surrender to survive long enough to assemble the documentary evidence. I believe God’s anointing upon my life sustained me through circumstances that might otherwise have extinguished my voice.

I was not fighting because I hated humanity. I was fighting because I value it. I wanted to remain part of it, and I did not want others to lose their place within it.

My documentary archive, comprising 35 years of official correspondence and institutional records, is part of that purpose. Its preservation and blockchain verification mean that my testimony can be examined beyond the immediate institutions and circumstances in which it originated.

I believe my survival and my witness have a purpose extending beyond my own life. I want the next vulnerable person who speaks up to encounter a society more will- ing to listen, investigate and protect than the one I encountered.

I did not want to die. I wanted the truth to live. And I wanted other people to have the opportunity to live authentically, safely and with dignity, without having to fight the very systems entrusted with their protection.

That, ultimately, is the human purpose behind my witness.

Chapter four — the human cost: a disabled person asking for help Behind every document in this archive is a human being who had to live with the consequences.

I was not a wealthy individual with unlimited financial resources, a legal team, political influence or institutional protection.

I was a disabled person seeking the ordinary necessities of human life.

I needed money to live. I needed a safe place to sleep. I needed appropriate support. I needed access to medical services. I needed legal assistance. I needed protection from further harm. I needed someone to acknowledge the seriousness of my circumstances.

Instead, I experienced what I describe as prolonged poverty, homelessness, institutional exclusion, isolation and repeated failures to obtain effective assistance.

I have printed and preserved thousands of pages of correspondence, yet I have repeatedly found myself with extraordinarily little material security to show for decades of attempting to obtain recognition and assistance.

The contrast is devastating.

I have spent years documenting institutional decisions, while the practical necessities of my own life have remained unresolved.

An agency can close a complaint. A department can refer a person elsewhere. An official can decline jurisdiction. A professional can decide that a matter belongs to another service. A service provider can fail to respond.

But the person experiencing the consequences cannot simply close the file on poverty, disability, homelessness or personal safety.

The administrative process may end.

The human consequences continue.

Chapter five — the medical record already on this archive The file already published under its own name is Dr Michael La Grosso, adjustment disorder, without psychosis or delusion. I have not added a new description of the injury. The diagnosis is a record. It is not a finding that an agency caused harm, and it is not a reason to dismiss the documents. A person’s distress cannot be understood if the circumstances then being reported are ignored.

Chapter six — sixteen psychiatric admissions: the need to examine the whole chronology Over approximately five years, across three Australian states, I report being admitted to psychiatric hospitals on sixteen occasions.

I want every admission considered in chronological context.

My contention is that poverty, homelessness, disability-related vulnerability, serious external stressors and my repeated whistleblower disclosures formed important parts of the circumstances surrounding these episodes.

The relevant evidence includes admission records, clinical assessments, discharge summaries, medical diagnoses, correspondence before and after admissions, records of my housing and financial circumstances, records of my public-interest disclosures, and communications with government agencies and support services.

I do not accept that the existence of psychiatric admissions automatically invalidates my testimony or makes my complaints unworthy of examination.

A person can experience genuine psychological distress in response to difficult external circumstances.

A person can also have a psychiatric diagnosis and still be entitled to have their allegations investigated.

I have serious concerns that, at various points, psychiatric intervention displaced attention from the practical safeguarding, housing, financial and legal problems I was trying to address.

I want that possibility independently examined.

I also want the consequences of the serious injury I have reported, and the cognitive difficulties I have reported, taken into account when assessing the way institutions communicated with me and responded to my requests.

My disability should have strengthened the obligation to communicate appropriately and protect my dignity.

It should never have made my testimony easier to dismiss.

Chapter seven — the international dimension: exile, protection and the record My testimony includes allegations of political exile, serious whistleblower-related detriment and an international protection claim.

I have raised concerns about an alleged assassination attempt and the circumstances in which I subsequently found myself without adequate protection.

These are grave allegations. I want them examined against the underlying evidence, including medical records, police material, official correspondence, witness evidence and the international submissions I have made.

The international dimension is important because the principles of human dignity, protection from persecution and access to justice do not stop at national borders.

The reference already printed on this archive, from the OHCHR file and not invented for this page, is UR/UST/23/AUS/17. The reading page is the asylum analysis. That OHCHR reference is not a UNHCR receipt number. A separate UNHCR acknowledgement number is not in the file used for this page, so none is inserted. A reference is not a determination that protection has been granted.

I contend that I have pursued numerous domestic avenues of complaint and review, and that meaningful domestic remedies have become inaccessible or exhausted in relation to significant aspects of my circumstances.

That contention must be assessed against the complete procedural history.

I am asking that the international dimension of my testimony be considered seriously, including whether the documented circumstances meet any applicable international protection criteria.

The existence of a claim is not itself a determination of refugee status. The purpose of preserving the original documents is to allow the appropriate authorities to assess the claim on its evidence.

Chapter eight — the present-day consequences: Ablepoint and the demand to leave The historical record is not detached from my present circumstances.

I am still seeking safety, appropriate disability support and recognition of safeguarding complaints.

My concerns about Ablepoint, its management and its handling of my complaints form part of the continuing documentary record. The page already fixed is Able Point.

I have repeatedly requested that my complaints concerning accommodation, support, safety, communication and alleged mistreatment be acknowledged and addressed.

I have also demanded an effective pathway to leave accommodation that I have described as harmful.

I have specifically raised concerns about the CEO, Rachel, including her failure, as I experience it, to provide an adequate response to my communications and requests for official identification.

I want the responsible management personnel clearly identified. I want incident records preserved. I want safeguarding complaints recorded. I want relevant communications and case notes made available. I want the circumstances of my accommodation and support independently examined.

I have also reported alleged threats, harassment, neglect, intimidation and other safeguarding concerns.

My testimony includes experiences I have described as audio harassment and V2K, as well as death threats. I have referred to a man facing proceedings at Wyong Local Court in relation to alleged threats.

I have also raised concerns that Ablepoint did not make an appropriate report concerning a threat that I regarded as serious.

I want that question independently investigated.

I am not asserting that the mere existence of an NDIS funding arrangement proves that any individual has participated in wrongdoing. My concern is whether the provider has fulfilled its safeguarding, reporting, communication and support obligations.

Publicly funded disability support must be accountable to the people it is intended to support.

The money exists to support a person with disability.

It must never become an excuse for avoiding accountability when that person raises a complaint.

Chapter nine — the Wyong mentalhealth contact of 4 November 2026 On 4 November 2026, mental-health personnel associated with Wyong contacted me following my communications concerning alleged abuse, neglect, unsafe circumstances and serious safeguarding concerns.

I understood that they were seeking to arrange an assessment.

This contact has caused me considerable concern because my original communications were intended to bring attention to practical safeguarding issues and the circumstances I was reporting.

My concern is that psychiatric assessment could become a substitute for investigating the underlying complaints or addressing my request to leave accommodation I have already identified as harmful.

I do not know who initiated the contact or what instructions, if any, were given by Ablepoint management. I therefore do not present an assumption that Rachel directed the contact as an established fact.

However, I insist that the sequence of events be documented.

What did I report? When did I report it? Who received the reports? What action was taken? Why was an assessment considered necessary? Were police, disability safeguarding authorities or other appropriate agencies notified? Were my requests for practical protection and accommodation addressed?

I want those questions answered.

A person reporting alleged abuse, threats, neglect and unsafe accommodation deserves an appropriate safeguarding response.

Mental-health assessment should not be used as a substitute for dealing with practical safety, housing and support needs.

I am entitled to be treated with dignity, to understand why an assessment is being sought and to have my actual complaints recorded accurately.

I want to be safe.

I want Crystal to be safe.

I want my request to leave harmful circumstances taken seriously.

I want practical assistance rather than another cycle in which the underlying prob- lem remains unresolved.

Chapter ten — the human betrayal and the absence of professional solidarity Perhaps the most devastating aspect of my experience has been the apparent absence of anyone willing to stand beside me and provide meaningful assistance.

I have approached professionals, government agencies, advocacy organisations, oversight bodies and legal assistance services.

I have supplied documents. I have explained the chronology. I have described my disability and financial vulnerability. I have identified the consequences of the decisions and omissions I believe require examination.

Yet I continue to experience extraordinary isolation.

I cannot establish from silence alone that every professional was threatened, manipulated or instructed not to help me.

However, I can describe the consequence of the repeated absence of meaningful assistance.

When every avenue appears to lead to another referral, another rejection, another procedural explanation or another unanswered communication, the individual is left carrying the entire burden.

I have considered the possibility that institutional pressures, financial incentives, professional standing, accreditation concerns or fear of reprisals may have influenced the willingness of people to intervene.

Those possibilities deserve examination where evidence supports them.

I do not present them as established facts about every individual.

The broader moral question remains: what is the value of professional responsibility if a vulnerable person can repeatedly report serious concerns and still be left without meaningful assistance?

Professional status is not an exemption from ethical responsibility. Government employment is not an exemption from personal accountability. Receiving public funding is not a licence to disregard the person whose welfare the funding is intended to support.

I believe the collective failure to provide meaningful assistance warrants serious independent scrutiny.

Chapter eleven — the blockchain: the decentralised preservation of the witness I have now undertaken a substantial act of documentary preservation.

Thousands of pages of government correspondence, institutional decisions, disclosures and supporting records have been collected, organised, indexed and published.

I have used cryptographic hashing and blockchain timestamping to strengthen the preservation of significant parts of this record.

The Bitcoin network provides a decentralised mathematical infrastructure through which cryptographic commitments can be timestamped and independently checked.

A receipt already on this site is the mandate’s OpenTimestamps receipt. Upgrade of that receipt was still pending Bitcoin confirmation when it was last checked. A pending receipt is not a Bitcoin confirmation, and it is not a finding.

The significance is practical and philosophical.

For decades, I experienced the power imbalance between an individual attempting to have their circumstances acknowledged and institutions possessing the resources, authority and administrative machinery to determine how complaints were handled.

I have now established an additional layer of preservation that does not depend exclusively on any single institution or website.

The blockchain does not decide the legal truth of my allegations. It does not convict anyone. It does not replace an independent investigation.

But it can help preserve the integrity and historical existence of the digital material that I have committed to the timestamping infrastructure.

The institutions do not have to agree with my interpretation. They do not have to endorse my testimony. They do not have to approve my publication.

The original documents can still be examined.

This is the paradoxical inversion.

The correspondence through which I sought recognition has become the foundation of a public historical record.

The witness who repeatedly asked to be heard has created an archive that can now be examined independently.

I have printed and preserved the record despite experiencing poverty and severe practical limitations.

I have undertaken this work without the institutional resources that would ordinari- ly be available to a large organisation conducting a historical investigation.

I have done it because I refuse to let the documentary history of my life disappear.

The record is no longer confined to the filing systems of the institutions that generated it.

THE WITNESS HAS BECOME THE ARCHIVIST. THE ARCHIVE HAS BECOME THE TESTIMONY. THE TESTIMONY HAS BECOME THE RECORD.

Chapter twelve — the paradoxical inversion: the tables have turned There is a profound irony in the fact that the very institutions whose correspondence formed part of my desperate requests for assistance have now contributed to the documentary record through which their decisions can be independently examined.

For years, I was the person attempting to obtain an official response. Now I have published the correspondence.

For years, I was asking institutions to preserve and acknowledge my complaints. Now I have created an independently accessible archive.

For years, I was attempting to establish a coherent chronology from fragmented institutional interactions. Now the chronology can be examined in one place.

For years, I was attempting to obtain recognition of the cumulative consequences of decisions made across multiple agencies. Now the public can compare those decisions and examine the wider pattern.

I have described the experience as a form of social mobbing: the cumulative isolation of an individual through the actions, omissions, referrals and apparent with- drawal of support across multiple social and institutional environments.

I contend that my whistleblower activities and repeated disclosures form an important part of the chronology.

The term social mobbing is my description of the pattern I experienced, not a judicial finding that every institution participated in a coordinated conspiracy.

The evidence must be examined institution by institution, document by document and event by event.

That is precisely why I have preserved it.

I do not need to claim that every allegation has already been legally established to insist that the documentary record deserves serious examination.

I am inviting journalists, historians, legal professionals, human-rights researchers and ordinary members of the public to read the source material.

I want the original documents examined. I want contradictions identified. I want institutional explanations obtained. I want the cumulative consequences understood.

The burden of examining the record should no longer rest entirely upon the individual who spent decades trying to obtain assistance.

Chapter thirteen — my sovereign declaration under the Most High God I now make a declaration of spiritual sovereignty.

My allegiance is with the Most High God, under the authority of Jesus Christ.

My ultimate allegiance is not to government, political authority, institutional hierarchy, professional status or the approval of any earthly office.

I recognise no person’s authority to diminish the dignity that God has given me.

I refuse to surrender my humanity, my conscience, my faith or my right to live safely because another person possesses institutional power over some aspect of my circumstances.

No government, police officer, lawyer, professional, agency, service provider or individual possesses a cosmic entitlement to deliberately harm a vulnerable human being.

Authority is not a licence for cruelty. Professional status is not an exemption from morality. Government employment does not extinguish personal responsibility.

Those entrusted with protecting vulnerable people carry obligations that extend beyond procedural compliance.

I therefore declare, under the Most High God and through Jesus Christ, that I will no longer willingly participate in relationships, arrangements or patterns of interaction that compromise my safety, dignity and fundamental humanity.

I withdraw my consent from unhealthy personal and professional relationships that I believe have caused me harm.

I reject any conscious or unconscious obligation that requires me to accept mistreatment, humiliation, exploitation or the abandonment of my basic needs.

Whether an arrangement was previously accepted, imposed, misunderstood or entered into without my full understanding, I reserve my right to withdraw from relationships and arrangements that are harmful.

I sever, in my spiritual conscience, every unhealthy attachment to persons, institu- tions, places and circumstances that perpetuate harm in my life.

I reject any arrangement that requires me to sacrifice my safety, dignity, freedom of conscience or fundamental humanity in order to obtain recognition or assistance.

I do not seek revenge. I do not seek to become what I believe has harmed me.

I seek freedom. I seek truth. I seek protection. I seek accountability. I seek restoration.

I seek the right to live without fear, deprivation or institutional humiliation.

I will not permit the history of my suffering to become the definition of my future.

My life belongs to God. My conscience belongs to God. My dignity is not an administrative concession. My survival is not a debt I owe to any institution.

I am no longer consenting to the destruction of my life as the price of being heard.

Chapter fourteen — the final reckoning: let the record speak I have spent approximately 35 years attempting to obtain recognition, protection and assistance.

I have experienced homelessness, poverty, disability-related vulnerability, repeated psychiatric admissions, institutional disputes and prolonged isolation.

I have made disclosures. I have submitted complaints. I have approached government departments. I have sought legal assistance. I have attempted to obtain protection through domestic institutions.

I have preserved thousands of pages of correspondence. I have documented the institutional responses. I have constructed a chronology. I have assembled the documentary evidence. I have used cryptographic preservation methods. I have published my testimony.

I am now inviting independent examination.

I do not ask the reader to accept every conclusion without scrutiny.

I ask the reader to examine the original correspondence, the dates, the institutional decisions, the medical records, the disclosure material and the subsequent events.

I ask the institutions named in the archive to explain their decisions and account for the consequences.

I ask that my disability be recognised as a reason for appropriate support and communication, not a reason to diminish my testimony.

I ask that the circumstances surrounding my repeated hospital admissions be examined rather than treated as isolated events.

I ask that my current safeguarding complaints receive practical attention.

I ask that the international dimension of my testimony be properly considered.

I ask that the documentary record be preserved.

And above all, I ask that I be permitted to live safely and with dignity.

I was a disabled person seeking help. I was a whistleblower attempting to disclose what I believed was wrongdoing. I was a human being asking for protection, housing, financial security, legal assistance and the opportunity to live with dignity.

I have emerged from homelessness, poverty, exile and profound institutional disappointment with a determination to preserve the truth as I understand it.

I have not surrendered my faith. I have not surrendered my conscience. I have not surrendered my humanity. I have not surrendered the historical record.

The institutions may disagree with my interpretation. The authorities may dispute my conclusions. The professionals may decline to endorse my testimony.

But the original correspondence remains available for examination.

The record is preserved. The witness remains.

The phoenix does not need permission from the ashes to rise.

With God’s grace and favour, I remain here.

THE TABLES HAVE TURNED.

THE RECORD REMAINS.

THE WITNESS REMAINS.

Epilogue — the words that cannot be taken back I do not seek revenge. I seek the restoration of the dignity that every human being deserves.

I do not ask that the world believe me merely because I have suffered. I ask that the world examine what I have preserved.

I do not ask that institutions surrender their lawful responsibilities. I ask that they fulfil them.

I do not ask for immunity from scrutiny. I invite scrutiny.

I do not ask that my testimony be accepted without question. I ask that it not be dismissed without examination.

I have placed my faith in the Most High God. I have placed the documentary record before humanity.

And I have made a decision that I will no longer abandon myself in the hope that another institution might finally acknowledge my existence.

Let every document be read. Let every date be examined. Let every institutional decision be placed in its proper chronological context. Let every omission be investigated where the evidence warrants it. Let every person retain their right to respond.

Let the truth be pursued without revenge, intimidation or further harm. Let the vulnerable be protected. Let the institutions entrusted with public responsibility remember the human beings behind their files.

And let my life become more than a record of what I endured. Let it become a testimony of survival, faith, conscience and the refusal to disappear.

Be still, and know that I am God.

THE SOVEREIGN WITNESS — THE TABLES HAVE TURNED — THE RECORD REMAINS.

Praise Jesus.

5 NOVEMBER 2026 · UNDER THE RECKONING · HIS TERM · NOT A CON- VICTION

Institutional murder I add this term because it is the name I give to what has been done to me. It is my conclusion. It is not a court verdict, and it is not a finding that every official committed a crime.

The justification is the life I have had to live, and the record of how institutions answered it.

I have been targeted. I have been exiled. I have been kept in poverty. I have been entrapped. I have asked for help from the people and the offices paid to care, and from the offices legally obliged to answer. I have not been given a dignified acknowledgment. I have not been given a dignified response.

I have demanded to leave a place where I say I am trailed, abused and tortured. That demand has not been treated as an emergency. The page of that demand is Able Point. The correspondence that recorded employment and then took no further action is Tredwell's letter of 27 March 2023.

I call this an international human-rights emergency, and I call it a matter of international whistleblower significance. Australia has ratified instruments that speak of dignity, personal security, equality, access to justice, and the rights of persons with disability. Those words are not a decoration. A person who discloses what he believes is wrongdoing, and who is then left in poverty, exile and entrapment, is entitled to have the documents read against those obligations.

I say the government is deliberately trying to silence me and to erase my testimony. I say my mere existence is treated as a threat to an illusion of control. I say that control was used to try to physically erase me. That is my allegation. It is not, on this page, a proved murder, and it is not a proved conspiracy of every official.

What I can say from the record is this. I asked. I supplied the papers. I named the harm. I demanded to leave. The answers I received were referrals, refusals, silence, and the continuation of the conditions I had already described. People who are paid to care, and who are bound by ethics, by statute, and by the human-rights instruments the government has ratified, did not give me the protection I asked for.

I believe officials were convinced or manipulated never to help me. Silence by itself does not prove that every official was instructed. It does prove the consequence I lived: no one stood with me in a way that changed the conditions.

I do not ask the reader to convict a government from this paragraph. I ask the reader to examine the letters, the dates, the demand to leave, and the absence of a dignified answer, and to judge whether the pattern I have named is the honest name for it.

INSTITUTIONAL MURDER IS MY NAME FOR IT. THE RECORD REMAINS. THE WITNESS REMAINS.

Praise Jesus.

5 NOVEMBER 2026 · BENEATH THE DECLARATIONS · HIS INVITATION · NOT A FINDING

The tables have turned: the government’s own record is now open for public examination I place this testimony, these declarations and the documentary archive before the public for one simple reason: the evidence should be examined by everyone, and the conclusions should be drawn from the documents themselves.

For more than thirty years, I have experienced what I regard as a sustained pattern of betrayal, institutional abandonment, exclusion and exile involving government departments, statutory authorities and public institutions. My account is not founded merely on recollection, emotion or accusation. It is supported by an extensive collection of official correspondence, decisions, notices, responses and omissions — bearing the letterheads, identifying details and words of the very institutions whose conduct I have challenged.

Their documents speak in their own language. Their decisions record what they decided. Their correspondence records what they were told and how they responded. Their failures to answer, investigate, explain or provide meaningful assistance form part of the chronology that I have preserved. Where information was withheld or access to records was refused through FOI processes, those refusals also became part of the documentary history.

I have repeatedly sought recognition, accountability, access to information and an opportunity to have the substance of my disclosures examined. I have experienced the cumulative consequences as betrayal and exile from the very institutions that should have been capable of responding to a person seeking protection and justice.

And now, the position has fundamentally changed.

The government institutions that I say attempted to silence, marginalise or erase my testimony are now confronted with the documentary record preserved in my own archive. I am making available the very correspondence, decisions and official documents through which their actions, responses and omissions can be examined.

The tables have turned. I am not asking those institutions to write my history for me. I am presenting their own records, in their own words, in their original documentary context, alongside the chronology and evidence I have assembled.

This website is therefore more than a personal declaration. It is an invitation to independent scrutiny. Every reasonable reader — including journalists, researchers, legal professionals, public officials, historians and members of the public — can examine the available material, distinguish established facts from allegations and interpretations, follow the documentary trail and reach an independent assessment.

I do not ask anyone to accept every conclusion simply because I have expressed it.

I ask them to read the records, examine the dates, compare the institutional responses with the disclosures that preceded them, consider what was answered and what remained unanswered, and judge the evidence for themselves.

There is a profound irony in this position: after years of seeking access to government-held information, and after experiencing refusals and institutional silence, I am now publishing a substantial body of the very official material through which the public can examine the history for themselves.

I have preserved my testimony. I have preserved the correspondence. I have preserved the chronology. Where cryptographic hashes and independent timestamp records are available, they provide additional means of checking whether particular digital records have been altered since preservation. They do not ask the reader to take my word for it; they provide a further mechanism for documentary verification.

The institutions once held the records. I have assembled the public archive.

I cannot compel anyone to agree with my interpretation. But neither can the existence of this documentary record be dismissed merely because its contents are uncomfortable, its author is disabled, or its conclusions challenge powerful institutions.

Let the documents be read. Let the chronology be examined. Let the omissions be considered in context. Let every institution be judged by what its own records actually establish.

I have spent decades trying to get the record acknowledged. Now the record is available for independent examination.

THE TABLES HAVE TURNED. THE RECORD REMAINS. THE WITNESS REMAINS.

And with God’s grace and favour, what I have preserved will remain available for generations to come.

Praise Jesus.

The letters, in their own words: the letter, the government evidence, MC23- 028244, FOI-2022-045, and the register beneath this declaration.

5 NOVEMBER 2026 · ADDITION · BENEATH THE DECLARATIONS · TES- TIMONY · NOT A FINDING

I have emerged I have emerged from circumstances that I once believed might destroy me. I have survived phoenix-like from the ashes of human betrayal, institutional abandonment, homelessness, poverty, exclusion and exile. I have continued to document, preserve and publish the evidence, even when I felt that the very institutions from which I sought protection had become part of the circumstances I was trying to expose.

I am still here.

My survival is not an admission that what happened was acceptable. It is not evidence that the harm was insignificant. Nor does my continued existence absolve any institution of its responsibility to account for its decisions, omissions or conduct.

I have transformed my experience into a public documentary record. What was once confined to correspondence, unanswered complaints, administrative decisions, personal testimony and official documents is now available for independent examination.

The record remains.

3. The tables have turned: the government’s own record For years, I sought recognition, answers, assistance and accountability through government departments, statutory authorities, oversight bodies, police, legal institutions and other public agencies.

I submitted correspondence. I made complaints. I requested information. I challenged decisions. I sought protection and assistance. I attempted to have my circumstances properly examined.

I have preserved official responses, decision letters, correspondence, administrative records and other documentary material arising from those interactions.

The significance of this archive is that the institutions concerned are not being asked to rely solely upon my recollection of events. Their own records, where preserved and authenticated, can be examined alongside my testimony.

The documents must be allowed to speak for themselves.

Where an agency acknowledged receiving correspondence, record that acknowledgement. Where it declined assistance, reproduce the actual decision. Where it referred me elsewhere, identify the referral. Where it did not answer a substantive question, identify the unanswered question. Where a document contradicts another document, place both records together and explain the discrepancy.

Do not convert an omission into proof of deliberate wrongdoing. Do not turn an allegation into an established finding. Equally, do not conceal a material omission, contradiction or unanswered question merely because it is uncomfortable.

The documentary record should permit readers to reach their own conclusions.

The tables have turned.

I once depended upon government institutions to disclose, explain and account for their own conduct. I now offer those same institutions, and the public, an organised documentary record through which their decisions, responses and omissions can be independently examined.

I am not asking anyone to accept my account without scrutiny. I am asking that the evidence be examined with the same seriousness that institutions expect when they make decisions about the lives of other people.

4. Thirty years of records: the cumulative history This testimony must examine the cumulative chronology of my experiences rather than isolating individual incidents from the circumstances that preceded and followed them.

A decision made by one agency may have consequences for a person’s access to income, accommodation, employment, safety, legal representation, disability support and basic dignity. A later institution may then assess that person without properly considering the circumstances created by the earlier decisions.

The cumulative effect matters.

My documentary framework is:

Systemic Removal of the Attributes Necessary to Live with Dignity in a Democracy.

Examine the documentary record for the cumulative impact upon:

Income, compensation and financial independence.

Housing, accommodation and personal security.

Employment, professional identity and livelihood.

Disability support and access to essential services.

Access to legal advice, representation and review.

Human rights, procedural fairness and legal rights.

Personal safety, reputation and the ability to participate in society.

Access to information and meaningful institutional accountability.

Do not assume that every adverse event was coordinated or that every agency acted with the same intention. Instead, establish the chronology, identify the institutions involved, document the decisions and examine whether the combined consequences created a pattern that warrants independent investigation.

The central question is not merely what happened in one interaction. It is what happened across time, across institutions and across the interconnected systems that affected my life.

5. O!cial correspondence, FOI and institutional accountability Give particular attention to the official documents in which government agencies describe their own decisions, responsibilities, limitations and actions.

Examine freedom-of-information requests and responses, including refusals, exemptions, delays, transfers, internal reviews and any recorded reasons for withholding information.

Where I say that government denied access to information, identify the relevant request, decision, date, agency and stated legal basis. Link the original document.

Distinguish between:

Information requested.

Information disclosed.

Information withheld.

The reasons supplied for withholding it.

Any review or appeal undertaken.

Questions that remain unresolved.

The fact that an agency declined to disclose information does not, by itself, establish misconduct. However, the decision and its consequences form part of the documentary history and may be relevant to understanding the extent to which I could obtain information about matters affecting my life.

The public should be able to examine the actual correspondence rather than being asked to accept a paraphrase. The letters already fixed on this site include MC23- 028244, 19 September 2023, the referral of my 5 July 2023 email to the Prime Minister; FOI-2022-045, the Department of the Prime Minister and Cabinet refusal, and the OAIC review of that department; and the Commonwealth Ombudsman service restriction of 8 August 2025. The fuller reading is the letter.

6. The human consequences: a person behind the paperwork This archive is not simply an administrative collection.

Behind every complaint number, reference number, decision letter and departmental response is a human being whose life continues while institutions process correspondence.

I am a person. I am not a case number, an administrative inconvenience or a collec- tion of professional opinions.

I have described experiences of homelessness, poverty, disability-related vulnerability, exclusion, abandonment and exile. I have described the consequences of trying to obtain assistance while simultaneously navigating multiple institutions and processes.

A bureaucratic response may be technically complete while leaving the underlying human problem unresolved.

A referral may satisfy an administrative procedure while leaving a vulnerable person without practical assistance.

A complaint may be closed without the person believing that the substantive issues have been answered.

These distinctions deserve examination.

Do not sensationalise my circumstances. Do not diminish them. Present the actual records, my testimony and the documented consequences in chronological order.

7. The Ben correspondence: preserve the primary evidence Locate the original Ben correspondence and any associated documents or transcripts, including materials identified as Ben-NDIS-Help and Ben-Ndis-Help-large, if they exist in the website archive or its linked repositories.

This material must be handled with particular care.

I have referred to messages that I understand to contain statements concerning an alleged attempted attack, a police description reportedly using the words “close call”, an alleged consensual event, an alleged fabricated report, an agreement or non-disclosure arrangement, and a statement attributed to Ben concerning corruption going “all the way to the top”.

These are matters I have raised and attributed to communications. They must not be represented as independently established facts unless the original evidence and appropriate corroboration support that conclusion.

The words already printed on this site, copied as written, are on Ben’s messages and the political chronology:

“Yes even the police said it was a close call.”

“The police told me about the consensual regretted sex.”

“The agencies went back through phone records and believed she was paid to discredit you.”

“You can’t tell anyone about this. It’s a top secret investigation. They made me sign a non disclosure agreement.”

“Remember you were messaging me about hitmen… That was them. They got caught. I thought you were just paranoid. You were right.”

“I’m scared. They could put a hit on me too.”

“You’ve uncovered systematic corruption that goes all the way to the top.”

The archive index prints this further sentence: “When I signed the agreement it instantly disappeared off my phone. A message popped up that said your device has been cleared of classified information. It’s some sort of agency grade electronic document that automatically wipes itself off your device.” It is on the archive index.

For each relevant statement: the surrounding conversation is the published page or the PDF, not a reconstruction. The author is identified on those pages as Ben, an NDIS provider, in the author’s account. Dates are printed on some pages of the export and not on others. Page 64 does not print its own clock time. A later page in the same file is dated 12 February 2025. The export is described on the police letter as beginning Friday 3 January 2025 at 17:28.

Do not invent a quotation, document title, link, police confirmation or legal finding.

The existence of a message can establish that a communication was made, subject to authentication. It does not automatically establish the truth of every event described in that communication.

That distinction strengthens the integrity of this archive.

8. Institutional silence and the question of accountability I have repeatedly expressed my concern that my website, documentary archive and requests for a dignified response have not received the meaningful engagement I believe the circumstances warrant.

I ask why.

Why can a person submit extensive documentary material and still feel that the central questions have not been addressed?

Why can correspondence move between agencies while the underlying circumstances remain unresolved?

Why can a person seeking protection, information or assistance experience the process itself as another barrier?

Why do institutional responses so often concentrate on jurisdiction, eligibility, process and referral while the cumulative human consequences remain unan- swered?

These are questions for public examination.

Do not assert that every professional, public official or political stakeholder shares one motive. Do not attribute a coordinated conspiracy to individuals without evidence. Instead, examine the institutional incentives, accountability structures, jurisdictional boundaries and decision-making processes that may contribute to fragmented responsibility.

The public deserves to know whether the system has mechanisms capable of recognising and correcting cumulative institutional failure.

9. The sovereign witness: spiritual allegiance and human dignity My spiritual allegiance is with the Most High God.

I stand under Christ, guided by conscience, faith and my commitment to speak truthfully about my experiences.

I do not understand my identity or my dignity as something bestowed by a government department, a tribunal, a police officer, a lawyer, a politician or an administrative decision-maker.

No institution has the authority to determine my ultimate spiritual worth.

I believe that truth must be preserved, that human dignity must be respected and that people entrusted with public power must be accountable for how they exercise it.

My faith does not require revenge. My testimony is not a declaration of vengeance against individuals. It is a declaration that I will not willingly surrender my dignity, silence my conscience or abandon the documentary record.

I have chosen preservation over erasure, testimony over silence and accountability over retaliation.

I do not ask readers to adopt my spiritual convictions. I ask them to respect my right to express them and to examine the documentary evidence for themselves.

10. The public record: two public records, one documentary purpose Present this archive through the framework:

Two public records, one documentary purpose.

The first record is the official documentary material produced by institutions: correspondence, decisions, reports, policies, acknowledgements, refusals and other records.

The second is the archive of testimony, chronology, analysis, preserved communications and supporting material through which I document my experience and examine the institutional record.

These two records must remain distinguishable.

Do not present my commentary as an official government finding. Do not present an agency's allegation as an established fact. Do not remove the original wording of an official document when quoting it.

Place the records alongside one another so readers can assess what each says, what it establishes, what it leaves unanswered and whether inconsistencies require further examination.

The documentary purpose is preservation, transparency, historical accountability and independent scrutiny.

11. The right to examine the evidence I invite journalists, researchers, legal professionals, historians, public officials, oversight bodies, human-rights organisations and members of the public to examine the archive.

I do not ask them to accept every interpretation I have placed upon the evidence.

I ask them to read the original documents.

Follow the hyperlinks. Examine the dates. Compare the decisions. Read the correspondence in context. Check the source material. Identify inconsistencies. Challenge my interpretations where the evidence does not support them.

An archive that invites independent scrutiny must also permit independent conclusions.

If a record supports my account, identify precisely how. If it does not, say so. If the evidence is incomplete, identify what is missing.

The integrity of the record is more important than the appearance of certainty.

12. What I am asking of government I am asking the relevant institutions and political stakeholders to engage with the documentary record rather than dismissing the person who assembled it.

I seek:

Acknowledgement of the existence and scope of the archive.

Identification of the agencies responsible for the decisions and matters documented.

Preservation of relevant government records.

Access to information in accordance with applicable law.

Proper consideration of the chronology and cumulative consequences.

Independent examination of material contradictions and unresolved allegations.

Clear explanations of jurisdictional boundaries and institutional responsibilities.

Appropriate referral of matters where another body has lawful responsibility.

A dignified response that addresses the substance of the issues raised.

Accountability wherever independently established evidence warrants it.

I do not claim that the publication of this archive itself constitutes a legal determination. I am asking for a process capable of examining the material fairly, independently and transparently.

13. The record remains I was not able to make every institution listen.

I was not able to compel every agency to answer every question.

I was not able to make every complaint produce the outcome I sought.

But I could preserve the correspondence. I could retain the documents. I could construct the chronology. I could publish the material. I could ensure that the records were not confined to a filing cabinet or dependent upon the continued willingness of an institution to acknowledge them.

That is what this archive represents.

It is the preservation of a documentary history that I believe deserves independent examination.

It is the refusal to allow a person’s experience to disappear simply because the administrative process has reached its conclusion.

It is the insistence that public institutions must be judged not only by the language of their policies but also by the decisions they make, the responsibilities they exercise and the consequences experienced by the people affected.

I have survived.

I have preserved the record.

I have published the evidence available to me.

THE TABLES HAVE TURNED.

THE SOVEREIGN WITNESS REMAINS.

THE RECORD REMAINS.

Praise Jesus.

DOCUMENTARY VERIFICATION GUIDE

The following links lead to named documents or indexes in the public Barrandodger archive. They are provided to help readers inspect source material independently. A link is a route to a record, not a conclusion about what that record proves.

Federal Court PID Assessment — 27 March 2023
A dated Federal Court record identified in the archive.

NSW Trustee & Guardian — section 122 document, 16 October 2024
A named NSW Trustee & Guardian document.

NSW Trustee vehicle disposal decision — 14 November 2025
A dated decision record.

Commonwealth Ombudsman complaint — 15 November 2021
A complaint document; a complaint is not itself a finding.

OAIC / OPMC document — 14 July 2022
A named correspondence/document in the archive.

Comcare determination — 26 May 2021
A dated Comcare determination.

AAT / ART decision — 12 July 2023
A tribunal decision record.

NDIS service failure notice — 20 January 2026
A notice authored/published in the archive; read its status and context.

Attorney-General’s Department letter MC23-028244 — 19 September 2023
A dated departmental letter.

FOI-2022-045 refusal — 14 April 2022
A refusal decision; its wording should be assessed directly.

OAIC letter — 1,187 Outlook items, 16 March 2022
A correspondence record referring to Outlook items.

Revised FOI-2022-045 decision — 8 October 2024
A revised decision record.

Prime Minister’s Office email — 12 December 2022
A dated email record.

The Documentary Trap — when the system’s own record becomes the evidence
A related analytical paper in the archive.

Ben-Ndis-Help-large — message export
A large correspondence export; individual messages require attribution and context.

Archive finding aid — 29 October 2026
A guide to locating material in the repository.

Primary archive repository — Barrandodger
Repository index and files.

Public archive website
Published archive interface.

SOURCE AND STATUS CAUTION

This edition was assembled from the supplied capture PDF’s extracted text for the requested passage. It has not independently authenticated every underlying record, tested every repository file, or obtained a court or agency finding on the allegations. Readers should inspect the linked originals, record dates, authorship, completeness and procedural status before drawing conclusions.