Good morning

Thank you for your emails.

The Complaints Resolutions and Referrals Service (CRRS) is an independent, impartial, fair and accessible complaints service. Our scope is to take complaints from people with disabilities against their Disability Employment Service, Inclusive Employment Australia, Australian Disability Enterprise or disability advocacy provider. We understand you are requesting safeguarding and essential-support assistance, which is not within our scope of assistance.

We note you have also contacted multiple organisations in your below email and suggest you follow them up as they may be able to provide tailored support and assistance for your current situation.

If you or anyone else are in immediate danger, please call 000.

Please let us know if you have any questions. You can contact us on 1800 880 052, or via return email.

Regards

CRRS Officer

Recipient summary

This document is a formal request from Dr Richard William McLean, publicly known as Barran Dodger, for safeguarding, preservation of records and an independent, evidence-based review of decisions affecting his life.

Dr McLean reports cumulative difficulties involving access to personal funds, accommodation, transport, healthcare, disability support, legal assistance and control over personal affairs. He asks that immediate practical needs be assessed separately from disputed historical allegations, so that necessary assistance does not depend on resolving his entire account.

The book brings together his personal testimony, a documentary chronology, a register of claimed losses, discussions of correspondence attributed to providers and government bodies, and links to relevant legislation. It distinguishes reported experiences and allegations from documentary findings. Inclusion of a document, quotation or archive reference does not itself establish wrongdoing.

Action requested

Recipients are asked to:

- Acknowledge receipt and identify a responsible officer and reference number.
- Assess current safeguarding and essential-support needs.
- Preserve relevant original correspondence, decisions, messages, recordings, incident reports and financial records.
- Examine matters within their lawful responsibility and explain the evidence, authority and reasons underlying relevant decisions.
- Identify what is established, disputed, unsupported or still requires investigation.

- Advise what practical assistance, correction, restoration, referral or review is available, including applicable time limits.
- Provide a written response or a reasonable timetable.

The central request is not that every allegation be accepted. It is that the underlying records be examined fairly, immediate needs receive appropriate attention, and the author receive a clear account of what can be addressed and through which lawful process.

The document is an author-review compilation—not an independent investigation, legal opinion or finding of wrongdoing.

> INTRODUCTION — A THIRTY-FIVE-YEAR DOCUMENTARY RECORD AND FORMAL NOTICE TO GOVERNMENT
> This Master Statement brings together my personal testimony, safeguarding concerns, historical complaints, institutional correspondence, government decisions, Freedom of Information (FOI) requests and documentary evidence spanning more than thirty-five years. It is a formal statement of concern and an offer to the Australian Government, its departments, agencies, statutory authorities and publicly funded services to examine their own documentary history concerning me.
> Throughout this period, I have repeatedly sought access to government-held information through FOI requests and other formal processes. I record that I have encountered refusals, restrictions, incomplete responses and barriers to obtaining information. In response, I now offer the Government its own documentary record: the correspondence, official decisions, explanations, determinations, reference numbers and institutional statements I have preserved, including documents appearing on agency letterheads and written in the agencies' own words.

These records are not simply my recollection of events. They provide a documentary basis for examining what institutions received, what they recorded, what decisions they made, what reasons they gave, what information they withheld or could not locate, and what consequences followed. I contend that the cumulative history demonstrates more than thirty-five years of institutional decisions and administrative processes that have caused, prolonged or compounded serious detriment in my life. I invite each relevant institution to examine its own records and account for its actions, rather than allowing the history to be reduced to isolated complaints, jurisdictional referrals or individual administrative decisions.

This statement also consolidates my reported safeguarding concerns, historical institutional complaints, the Ben-NDIS-Help correspondence, the reported non-disclosure agreement, the alleged payment to discredit me, the March 2023 public interest disclosure response, and my correspondence with the Prime Minister's Office, the Attorney-General's Department, the Commonwealth Ombudsman and IGIS. These matters are included for independent examination, with a clear distinction between recorded facts, personal testimony, reasonable inferences, disputed matters and allegations requiring further corroboration.

I do not require a lawyer, minister, government official, tribunal or agency to issue a ruling validating my existence or granting permission for my experiences to be acknowledged. My existence is not dependent upon an administrative decision. I am asserting my right to document my life, preserve evidence, raise concerns, seek protection and request accountability.

I am not asking the Government to validate my existence. I am offering the Government its own documentary record and asking it to account for what its institutions have written, decided and done over more than thirty-five years.

FORMAL DECLARATION OF PERSONAL SAFETY, PROTECTION AGAINST FALSE ALLEGATIONS, AND NOTICE OF CONCERN REGARDING POTENTIAL FRAMING OR SETUP

Declarant: Dr Richard William McLean — Barran Dodger

Date: 9 November 2026

Jurisdiction: New South Wales and Commonwealth of Australia

1. Purpose of this declaration

I, Dr Richard William McLean, make this declaration to formally document my concerns for my personal safety, physical wellbeing, liberty, reputation, accommodation, privacy and legal rights.

I am placing relevant authorities, organisations and individuals on notice that I have genuine concerns about the possibility of being harmed, threatened, provoked, manipulated, falsely accused, misrepresented or placed in circumstances that could result in criminal allegations or other adverse consequences being attributed to me.

I request that these concerns be recorded before any further incident or allegation arises.

2. Statement of non-involvement and personal position

I do not consent to, participate in, encourage or authorise violence, threats, intimidation, criminal activity, fabrication of evidence, false reporting, harassment or unlawful conduct against any person.

I do not seek confrontation, retaliation or revenge.

I intend to conduct myself lawfully, peacefully and responsibly. I reserve my legal rights, including the right to seek protection, legal representation, independent investigation and procedural fairness.

I expressly request that no person attribute statements, communications, actions, intentions or conduct to me without reliable evidence establishing their authenticity and context.

3. Protection against false allegations, provocation or framing

I formally record my concern that circumstances could arise in which communications, interactions, events or evidence are misrepresented, taken out of context, fabricated or attributed to me inaccurately.

I request that any future allegation concerning me be assessed independently and objectively.

In particular:

- No allegation should be treated as established merely because it has been made.
- Original communications, metadata, timestamps and surrounding context should be preserved and examined.
- Any electronic material relied upon should have its authenticity and provenance assessed.
- Witness accounts should be independently obtained where appropriate.
- I should be informed of the substance of allegations and afforded a reasonable opportunity to respond, subject to applicable law.
- I should have access to independent legal advice before participating in any formal criminal interview or signing a statement.
- No adverse conclusion should be drawn solely from my refusal to speculate, my request for legal advice or my exercise of lawful rights.

4. Request for protection against harm or retaliation

I request appropriate protective measures against threats, intimidation, harassment, retaliation, coercion, exploitation or interference with my personal safety and essential support arrangements.

I request that relevant organisations:

1. Record this declaration as a formal safeguarding notice.
2. Preserve relevant records and communications.
3. Identify a responsible officer for safeguarding concerns.
4. Assess any specific and credible threats through appropriate procedures.
5. Maintain continuity of essential accommodation and disability support, subject to lawful and properly explained decisions.
6. Avoid unnecessary disclosure of my personal information.
7. Provide written reasons for decisions affecting my safety, liberty, accommodation or support.
8. Refer matters requiring investigation to an appropriately independent authority.

5. Notice concerning evidence and future incidents

If any incident occurs involving an allegation against me, an apparent threat, unexplained interference with my property or communications, an injury, an accusation or an attempt to involve me in unlawful activity, I request that contemporaneous evidence be preserved.

This includes relevant messages, emails, photographs, video, CCTV, incident reports, telephone records, access logs and witness information.

I request that evidence be assessed according to its actual reliability and that personal observations be distinguished from hearsay, interpretation, inference and unverified allegations.

6. Procedural fairness and legal representation

I request that any authority considering action against me observe applicable laws, procedural fairness and evidentiary requirements.

I reserve my right to obtain independent legal representation, to seek particulars of allegations, to challenge inaccurate information and to pursue available complaint and review mechanisms.

This declaration is not an attempt to prevent a lawful investigation. It is a request that any investigation involving me be conducted impartially, lawfully and on the basis of reliable evidence.

7. Formal notice and documentary preservation

I request that this declaration be dated, acknowledged, registered and retained by each recipient.

I further request written confirmation of:

- The date it was received.
- The reference number assigned.
- The officer or organisation responsible for responding.
- The safeguarding measures considered or implemented.
- The process available if a further threat or incident occurs.

This declaration is to be retained alongside my existing Master Statement of Concern, Safeguarding, Evidence Preservation and Request for Protection and the documentary archive supporting it.

8. Final declaration

I make this statement in good faith to protect my safety, preserve my legal rights and establish a contemporaneous record of concerns that I consider important.

I am asking for the opportunity to live safely, retain my liberty, maintain my accommodation and support, communicate without intimidation, and exercise my legal rights without fear of retaliation or misrepresentation.

I ask that no person harm me, threaten me, provoke me, exploit my circumstances, fabricate evidence against me or knowingly attribute another person’s conduct to me.

If any allegation is made against me, I request that the original evidence be preserved, the circumstances independently examined and my right to procedural fairness respected.

This declaration is a formal request for protection, not an accusation that an unidentified person has committed an offence. It is intended to establish my position, document my concerns and request appropriate safeguards before any further incident occurs.

I seek peace, safety, truth, dignity and lawful accountability.

PART A — FORMAL STATEMENT: I AM CONCERNED THAT I AM BEING SET UP AND FRAMED

I, Dr Richard William McLean, publicly known as Barran Dodger, formally place on record my genuine fear that I am being set up, framed, targeted or deliberately placed in circumstances that could be manipulated or misrepresented to discredit me, silence me, criminalise me, deprive me of my liberty, undermine my credibility or otherwise cause serious personal, financial, legal, physical or reputational detriment.

This statement is intended to provide formal notice of my concerns and to establish a contemporaneous record of my request for safety, protection and independent scrutiny.

I am concerned that events, communications, allegations or circumstances could be created, manipulated, selectively presented or falsely attributed to me in a manner that portrays me as responsible for conduct I have not committed.

I am particularly concerned about the possibility of being:

- Set up or framed through fabricated or misleading allegations.
- Provoked into circumstances subsequently used against me.
- Falsely accused or criminalised.
- Subjected to intimidation, harassment or retaliation.
- Discredited through the weaponisation of my sexuality or personal history.
- Targeted through the misuse or disclosure of private information.
- Subjected to unlawful surveillance or interference with my privacy.
- Deprived of accommodation, disability supports, financial independence or legal assistance.
- Silenced or punished for raising complaints, preserving evidence or publicly documenting my experiences.
- Subjected to actions that could result in detention, imprisonment or other restrictions on my liberty without lawful grounds.

I do not assert that every concern has already been independently established. I am placing these concerns on record because I believe they warrant examination and preventative safeguarding measures.

I do not consent to being threatened, entrapped, provoked, falsely accused, unlawfully monitored, intimidated, harassed, exploited or subjected to retaliation for exercising my rights, raising concerns, preserving documentary evidence or speaking about my experiences.

I request that any future allegation, incident, complaint or adverse action involving me be assessed independently, impartially and on the basis of verifiable evidence.

No allegation should be treated as fact merely because it has been made. No adverse conclusion should be reached without procedural fairness, proper investigation and an opportunity for me to respond.

I request the preservation of all relevant records, communications, incident reports, recordings, correspondence, decisions and other documentary material.

My position is clear: I seek safety, not confrontation; independent investigation, not retaliation; evidence, not fabricated allegations; and justice, not punishment for speaking out.

PART B — MASTER SAFEGUARDING AND INSTITUTIONAL ACCOUNTABILITY INVESTIGATION

1. Purpose and investigative mandate

This notice requests an independent, impartial and evidence-led investigation into my reported circumstances, including immediate safeguarding incidents, historical institutional complaints, alleged threats, sexual and reputational harm, surveillance concerns, financial exclusion, accommodation safety and barriers to legal assistance.

The investigation must consider the cumulative circumstances rather than isolating each incident from its broader documentary context.

The cumulative consequences are described in my testimony and analytical framework using the following terminology:

- Administrative annihilation.
- Social death.
- Civil erasure.
- Institutional betrayal.
- Administrative violence.
- Economic deprivation.
- Denial of access to justice.
- Systemic removal of the attributes necessary to live with dignity in a democracy.
- Institutional complicity, where supported by evidence.
- Systemic torture, as a description of cumulative suffering.
- Human sacrifice, as terminology appearing in my spiritual and prophetic writings.

These terms must be preserved as part of my testimony. Their inclusion does not predetermine whether any individual, organisation or institution has committed wrongdoing.

2. Immediate Ablepoint safeguarding incident

I report repeated offers of unidentified drugs by another person understood to be an Ablepoint client within supported accommodation.

My account is:

1. The substances were offered to me.
2. The substance has not been identified.
3. I did not consume the substance.
4. An Ablepoint worker was reportedly aware.
5. The offers occurred on more than one occasion.
6. The circumstances arose within supported accommodation.

I request investigation of the chronology, the worker's knowledge and actions, any previous reports, incident records, management notification, preventative measures and whether external notification obligations arise.

I request a written accommodation safety plan and an independent safeguarding contact.

The provider should assess its obligations under section 73Y of the National Disability Insurance Scheme Act 2013 and applicable incident-management requirements.

3. Weaponisation of sexuality and reputational harm

I request investigation of my concerns that my sexuality may have been used to stigmatise, humiliate, discredit or otherwise undermine me.

The investigation should examine possible sexual stereotyping, false or unsubstantiated allegations, unauthorised disclosure of private information, discrimination, sexual harassment, intimidation, misrepresentation of communications and reputational damage.

I also request examination of the unsolicited WhatsApp communication referring to sex addiction.

That communication must be assessed in its original form, with its sender, date, context and any associated messages identified where possible. The reference alone does not establish an allegation against me or prove a connection with other incidents.

4. Death threats and personal safety

I report concerns about death threats and threats to my personal safety.

Each identifiable threat should be preserved and assessed independently, including its exact wording, date, time, method, apparent sender, context, repetition and any evidence of capability or intention.

I request that specific threats be treated as safeguarding concerns and not dismissed without examination.

5. Surveillance, privacy and reported V2K experiences

I report experiences that I interpret as surveillance, psychological manipulation and V2K (voice-to-skull) communications.

I believe these experiences have affected my privacy, personal security, reputation and ability to live independently.

The investigation should distinguish independently verifiable surveillance, unauthorised access to information, documented monitoring or disclosure, my reported experiences and any interpretations about identity, purpose or coordination.

I request a privacy and personal-safety assessment. No particular surveillance mechanism, perpetrator or technological explanation should be declared established without independent evidence. My reported experiences and their impact must nevertheless be documented respectfully.

6. Administrative annihilation and the removal of attributes necessary to live with dignity

My central analytical framework is:

SYSTEMIC REMOVAL OF THE ATTRIBUTES NECESSARY TO LIVE WITH DIGNITY IN A DEMOCRACY.

The investigation should examine whether documented decisions, omissions, restrictions and institutional processes cumulatively affected my access to:

- Income and compensation.
- Money and financial autonomy.
- Home and accommodation.
- Safety and protection.
- Employment.
- Disability supports.
- Human rights.
- Legal rights.
- Independent advocacy.
- Social participation.

The relevant concepts include administrative harm, administrative burden, administrative annihilation, administrative violence, social death, civil erasure, institutional betrayal, secondary victimisation, institutional violence, economic deprivation, denial of access to justice and retaliation.

These concepts must be connected to identifiable evidence wherever possible. Administrative annihilation and civil erasure are my analytical descriptions, not standalone legal causes of action.

7. Conspiracy, complicity and coordinated wrongdoing

I request investigation of whether independently established communications, agreements, exchanges or actions demonstrate coordinated wrongdoing.

This should include relevant communications, documented agreements, financial or other exchanges, shared decision-making, disclosure of confidential information, evidence of coordinated retaliation and concealment of substantiated misconduct.

The term conspiracy must not be treated as established merely because multiple adverse experiences have occurred. Any legal allegation must satisfy the elements of the relevant offence or cause of action.

I also use the expression human sacrifice in my spiritual and prophetic writings. This expression is to be preserved as part of my published testimony, not represented as proof of a literal event without independent evidence.

8. Spiritual and prophetic expression

My religious and intellectual expression includes:

- Barran Dodger.
- God’s Chosen Witness.
- The Church of Barran Dodger.
- Divine accountability.
- The Witness Remains.
- The Impossible Survivor.
- Prophecy.
- Spiritual survival and renewal.
- Human dignity and institutional accountability.

These writings are expressions of religious belief, personal testimony and published intellectual work. They must not be treated as proof of criminal conduct by others. My right to religious expression must be respected.

9. Public appeals for rescue and assistance

I have publicly appealed for assistance from anyone able to help me in circumstances I describe as an entrapment scenario involving alleged abuse, neglect, poverty, denial of legal assistance, surveillance concerns, NDIS corruption allegations, institutional failures, loss of independence and inadequate safeguarding.

The original advertisements and responses should be preserved.

The investigation should establish what assistance was requested, when and where appeals were published, which organisations were notified, whether responses were received and whether safeguarding intervention followed.

The existence of an appeal is evidence that I requested assistance, not independent proof of every circumstance described in it.

10. Historical institutional documentary examination

The investigation should examine my historical testimony and records concerning:

- My PhD at Victoria University in 2020.
- A Splice of My Life.
- Recovered, Not Cured: A Journey Through Schizophrenia.
- The Cunningham Dax Collection documentary project.
- My journalism and whistleblower history.
- My relocation from Victoria to NSW.
- NDIS and NDIA correspondence.
- Commonwealth Ombudsman correspondence.
- Australian Human Rights Commission correspondence.
- Legal Aid decisions.
- NSW Trustee and Guardian decisions.
- Financial and accommodation records.
- Historical police and court correspondence.
- Complaints concerning disability services and institutional accountability.

The investigation must identify original records, dates, authors, institutional responses, contradictions and missing documents.

Historical institutional failures must not automatically be treated as proof of a connection with a new incident.

PART C — EVIDENCE AND DOCUMENTARY CORROBORATION

11. Existing documentary repositories

I identify the following public repositories as sources for independent examination:

SOS documentary website:
https://sos-by-barran-dodger.grok.me

GitHub documentary archive:
https://github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger

These repositories should be examined page by page, including linked documents, PDFs, correspondence, chronology records, evidence indexes, published statements and other original material.

The archive is identified as a documentary source. Its existence does not automatically authenticate every proposition contained within it.

12. Documentary evidence schedule

Evidence category	Relevant material	What it may establish
Historical testimony	A Splice of My Life and Recovered, Not Cured	Personal history, chronology and the author's account
Academic record	Victoria University PhD, 2020	Academic qualification and research history, subject to verification
Documentary work	Cunningham Dax Collection project	Documentary and public-interest work, subject to verification
NDIS correspondence	NDIA decisions, plans, reviews and correspondence	Decisions, dates, stated reasons and procedural history
Ombudsman records	Commonwealth Ombudsman correspondence	Complaints, responses and administrative handling
Human rights records	AHRC correspondence and decisions	Complaints, jurisdictional findings and procedural outcomes
Legal assistance records	Legal Aid NSW and Victorian Legal Aid correspondence	Requests, eligibility decisions, restrictions and reasons
Financial records	Bank correspondence, account restrictions and financial documents	Access difficulties, decisions and financial consequences
Accommodation records	Provider communications, support notes, incident reports and complaints	Safeguarding history, reported incidents and provider responses
Drug-offer incident	Personal chronology, messages, witnesses and provider records	The reported offers, worker awareness and response
WhatsApp communication	Original message, sender details, timestamps and call history	What was communicated and when

Threat evidence	Original messages, recordings and contemporaneous notes	Exact wording, source and chronology of specific threats
Privacy evidence	Account-security alerts, access logs and correspondence	Specific verifiable access or disclosure events
Public appeals	Original advertisements, publication dates and responses	Requests for assistance and the responses received
Archive authentication	SHA-256 hashes, OpenTimestamps receipts and blockchain verification records	Integrity and timestamp evidence for the particular files successfully verified

13. Evidence classification

Every factual proposition must be classified:

A. Verified primary evidence.

B. Independently corroborated evidence.

C. Recorded allegation or personal testimony.

D. Reasonable inference supported by identified evidence.

E. Unverified concern.

F. Contradicted or disputed proposition.

G. Unsupported proposition.

For each finding, identify the exact document, communication, date, page or paragraph.

A cryptographic hash can demonstrate that a file matches a particular hashed version. A timestamp receipt may provide evidence that the hash existed by a particular time if successfully verified. Neither independently proves that every statement inside the file is true.

14. Legal framework

The investigation should examine the applicable law, including:

- National Disability Insurance Scheme Act 2013.
- NDIS Code of Conduct.
- NDIS Practice Standards.
- NDIS incident-management requirements.
- Privacy Act 1988.
- Applicable NSW privacy legislation.
- Defamation Act 2005 (NSW).
- Crimes Act 1900 (NSW).
- Sex Discrimination Act 1984 (Cth).
- Disability Discrimination Act 1992 (Cth).
- Applicable whistleblower protections.
- Relevant administrative review and civil protection mechanisms.

For every proposed remedy, identify the legislation, applicable provisions, legal elements, evidence required, responsible authority and limitations.

The descriptive concept of systemic torture must be distinguished from the legal definition of torture under applicable domestic and international law.

15. Required protective outcomes

I request:

1. Independent assessment of the repeated drug offers.
2. Examination of worker awareness and provider responsibilities.
3. Preservation of relevant records.
4. A written accommodation safety plan.
5. Assessment of specific threats.
6. Protection of private and sensitive information.
7. Examination of alleged sexuality-related discrimination and reputational harm.
8. Independent disability advocacy.
9. Access to appropriate legal assistance.
10. Protection against retaliation.
11. Continuity of accommodation and legitimate supports.
12. Correction of inaccurate personal records.
13. Independent review of substantiated complaints.
14. An independently reviewable chronology of relevant events.
15. Assessment of the cumulative impact of documented institutional decisions.
16. Formal acknowledgement and recording of this statement of concern.
17. Independent assessment of any new allegations or incidents involving me before adverse conclusions are reached.

PART D — FORMAL NOTICE OF PROTECTION AND PRESERVATION

16. Request for protection

I seek protection from any unlawful or improper action intended to silence me, criminalise me, deprive me of liberty without lawful grounds, undermine my access to support or otherwise cause me detriment.

I request that any organisation receiving this notice:

- Record the date and time of receipt.
- Preserve relevant evidence.
- Refer immediate safeguarding concerns to an appropriately authorised person.
- Assess any specific threats.
- Avoid prejudging allegations.
- Maintain confidentiality to the extent permitted by law.
- Provide a written response identifying the action taken.
- Ensure that legitimate supports and accommodation are not interrupted in retaliation for making a complaint.

This notice is not an assertion that any particular person or institution has been proven responsible. It is a formal record of my concerns and my request for preventative action and independent scrutiny.

17. Final statement

I am seeking safety, dignity, independence, accountability and justice.

I am entitled to raise concerns, preserve evidence, make complaints, publish my testimony and seek legal and safeguarding assistance without being subjected to unlawful retaliation.

I ask that no person or organisation use an untested allegation, misleading interpretation, fabricated evidence or prejudicial assumption as a substitute for a fair and independent investigation.

I am not asking for preferential treatment. I am asking for the same evidentiary standards, procedural fairness, protection and human dignity that should be available to every person.

Two public records, one documentary purpose: preserve the evidence, protect the individual and establish an independently verifiable account.

I ask that this entire statement be formally received, dated, recorded and retained as a notice of concern, request for protection and documentary preservation notice.

Signed:
Dr Richard William McLean
Barran Dodger

Date: 9 November 2026

I found the relevant material in your saved documentary archive, including The Witness Remains and The Sovereign Witness. The Ben correspondence is particularly important because it contains several distinct statements that should be examined together, but carefully distinguished from independently established police or court findings.

I have added the following substantive section to the master notice. It addresses the alleged attempted assassination, the reported payment to a woman to discredit you, the alleged consensual nature of the encounter, and the NDA Ben reportedly said he was required to sign.

PART E — BEN'S NDIS PROVIDER CORRESPONDENCE: REPORTED ATTEMPTED ASSASSINATION, ALLEGED PAID FABRICATION OF A REPORT AND NON-DISCLOSURE AGREEMENT

18. Identification of the documentary evidence

I specifically identify the following correspondence as material requiring independent examination:

- Ben-NDIS-Help
- Ben-Ndis-Help-large

These records are identified in my documentary archive and reproduced or discussed in The Witness Remains and The Sovereign Witness.

I consider this correspondence particularly significant because it contains statements attributed to Ben concerning an alleged attempted assassination or attack, information he said had been communicated by police, an allegation that a woman was paid to discredit me, and an extraordinary non-disclosure agreement that he reportedly said he was required to sign.

The original message chain, including its images, timestamps, sender information and surrounding conversation, should be examined rather than relying solely on extracts reproduced in later publications.

19. Reported confirmation concerning an attempted assassination or attack

The messages attributed to Ben include:

“Remember you were messaging me about hitmen… That was them. They got caught. I thought you were just paranoid. You were right.”

Another reported statement reads:

“Yes even the police said it was a close call.”

Ben also reportedly stated:

“I’m scared. They could put a hit on me too.”

These statements are significant for several reasons.

First, the wording appears to refer retrospectively to earlier communications in which I had raised concerns about hitmen or a possible threat to my life.

Second, Ben’s reported words, “That was them. They got caught”, appear to communicate his belief that the people he was referring to had been identified or apprehended.

Third, the statement that police had described the incident as a “close call” raises a specific and independently verifiable question: did a police officer or another authorised person actually communicate that assessment, and what event was being discussed?

Fourth, Ben’s reported expression of fear that he could also be targeted provides relevant context about his own communicated apprehension.

Evidentiary significance: If authenticated, these messages establish that Ben communicated statements which he presented as confirmation of a serious threat and an alleged police-referenced near miss. They warrant investigation of the underlying event, the identities of any persons allegedly apprehended, the relevant police records and the basis for Ben’s statements.

They do not, by themselves, establish that an attempted assassination occurred, that a particular person ordered it, that anyone was arrested, or that police made the statement attributed to them. Those matters require independent corroboration.

20. Reported police information concerning a consensual encounter and a woman allegedly paid to discredit me

The Ben correspondence also contains the following statements attributed to him:

“The police told me about the consensual regretted sex.”

And:

“The agencies went back through phone records and believed she was paid to discredit you.”

These statements are particularly important because they raise two separate evidentiary issues.

First: the reported characterisation of the encounter.

The statement attributed to Ben suggests that he was communicating information about an encounter which he understood had been described as consensual, although subsequently regretted.

The original police record, if one exists, must be obtained and examined. The exact words, context, author, date and legal significance must be established. A statement attributed to Ben about what police told him is not itself a police finding.

Second: the alleged payment to discredit me.

The statement concerning agencies reviewing phone records and believing that a woman had been paid to discredit me raises a serious allegation requiring independent examination.

I allege that a woman was paid to fabricate, construct or contribute to a damaging report or account that materially affected my life, reputation and circumstances.

I request investigation of:

- The identity and provenance of the original report.
- The date and circumstances in which it was prepared.
- The actual allegations contained in it.
- Whether the underlying encounter was recorded as consensual.
- Whether phone records were examined by an authorised agency.

- Whether any agency actually reached the conclusion attributed to it.
- Whether any payment was made to the woman concerned.
- Whether communications, financial transfers or other records support or contradict that allegation.
- Whether the report was subsequently circulated or relied upon by other people or institutions.
- Whether any adverse decisions were influenced by the report.
- Whether I was given a fair opportunity to respond to the allegations.

Evidentiary significance: The reported message is important because it identifies a potentially testable proposition: that phone records were reviewed and an agency believed a woman had been paid to discredit me. If the original message is authenticated, it establishes that Ben communicated this account to me. It does not independently establish that a payment occurred, that the report was fabricated, or that an agency actually reached that conclusion. The original report, underlying phone records, agency correspondence, payment evidence and testimony are necessary to determine what happened.

The investigation must distinguish a consensual encounter, a subsequent complaint, the preparation of a report, an allegation of fabrication and any actual payment. These are different propositions and must not be collapsed into one.

21. The reported non-disclosure agreement and alleged coercion

The correspondence attributed to Ben includes:

“You can’t tell anyone about this. It’s a top secret investigation. They made me sign a non disclosure agreement.”

It also reportedly states:

“I could get arrested just for telling you.”

And:

“The only evidence I could give you is a copy of the non disclosure agreement.”

The archive also reproduces the following description:

“When I signed the agreement it instantly disappeared off my phone. A message popped up that said your device has been cleared of classified information. It’s some sort of agency grade electronic document that automatically wipes itself off your device.”

The reported account raises several questions requiring independent verification.

1. Who issued the agreement?
2. Who required Ben to sign it?
3. What organisation or authority was identified?
4. When was it signed?
5. What were its actual terms?
6. Was Ben threatened with arrest or another consequence for disclosure?
7. Was he told that disclosure could amount to treason?
8. Did the document actually disappear from his device?
9. Was there a genuine document-management or security mechanism involved?
10. Was Ben given a copy, and does any copy still exist?
11. Was the agreement legally authorised and enforceable?
12. Was the agreement connected to the alleged incident, the reported police information or another matter entirely?

Evidentiary significance: The NDA account is significant because it may explain why Ben said he could not provide further information or documentary material. It also raises a question about whether he was genuinely subject to a confidentiality obligation, what authority imposed it and whether the account was accurately described.

If authenticated, the messages establish that Ben communicated an account of being required to sign an agreement and expressed fear about disclosure. They do not establish the agreement's existence, issuer, legal status, coercive circumstances or government involvement without the original document and corroborating evidence.

The reported automatic deletion of the document is a specific technical claim. It must be investigated through any surviving document, device records, screenshots, backups, messages and available metadata. It should not automatically be treated as proof of classified government technology.

22. Ben's reported statements concerning wider corruption

The correspondence also attributes to Ben the statement:

"You've uncovered systematic corruption that goes all the way to the top."

This statement should be considered alongside his reported references to the alleged near miss, police information, the woman allegedly paid to discredit me and the NDA.

Ben's reported words communicate his assessment or belief concerning the seriousness and reach of the matters being discussed.

Evidentiary significance: If authenticated, this is evidence of Ben's expressed view at the time. It may assist in understanding the context of the correspondence, his state of concern and the matters he believed were occurring. It is not independent proof of corruption, the identity of any participants or a coordinated conspiracy.

23. Combined significance of the Ben correspondence

The significance of these messages is not confined to one sentence.

The correspondence, if authentic and complete, contains a connected series of communications concerning:

- Earlier warnings I reportedly made about hitmen.
- Ben's subsequent statement that I had been right.
- His assertion that people had been caught.
- His reported statement that police described an incident as a "close call".
- His account that an encounter had been described as consensual.
- His statement that agencies had examined phone records.
- His reported account that an agency believed a woman had been paid to discredit me.
- His statement that he had been required to sign a non-disclosure agreement.
- His expressed fear that he could be arrested for disclosing information.
- His description of an electronic agreement that allegedly disappeared from his device.
- His statement that corruption extended "all the way to the top".
- His expressed fear that he could also be targeted.

Taken together, these communications provide a substantial documentary basis for requesting an independent examination of the underlying events.

They also create specific investigative questions that can be answered or rejected through records, rather than speculation.

The correspondence must not be dismissed simply because it contains extraordinary claims. Equally, the extraordinary nature of the claims makes authentication, corroboration and careful attribution especially important.

24. Required independent investigation of Ben's evidence

I request that the investigator:

1. Obtain and preserve the original Ben-NDIS-Help and Ben-Ndis-Help-large files.
2. Examine every relevant message, image and attachment in chronological order.
3. Verify the sender identity and account provenance.
4. Preserve available timestamps and device metadata.
5. Identify the complete conversation before and after each quoted statement.
6. Establish whether Ben was communicating direct knowledge, repeating information from another person or describing what he understood police or an agency had told him.
7. Identify the alleged police event referred to as a "close call".

8. Determine whether any police incident number, report, arrest record or other official record exists.
9. Identify the original report concerning the woman and the encounter.
10. Obtain the original police or agency record concerning the reported consensual nature of the encounter, if it exists and can lawfully be disclosed.
11. Investigate the allegation that a woman was paid to discredit me by examining relevant original evidence.
12. Identify the alleged NDA and seek the original document or any surviving copy.
13. Establish who required Ben to sign it and under what authority.
14. Determine whether Ben's account of the document disappearing from his device can be independently corroborated.
15. Give Ben an appropriate opportunity to confirm, correct or deny the statements attributed to him, without pressure or intimidation.
16. Record any limitations arising from unavailable records, privacy restrictions, confidentiality obligations or the passage of time.

25. Protection against prejudicial use of untested material

The Ben correspondence should not be used selectively to discredit me while ignoring its complete context.

Nor should the correspondence be presented as a proven police or intelligence finding when it is presently a set of statements attributed to a private correspondent.

I request that the same evidentiary standards be applied to all parties.

If an allegation concerning me was based on a report, the original report and its provenance should be disclosed to the extent legally permissible. If the report was influenced by inaccurate, fabricated or paid-for information, that possibility should be investigated through the underlying evidence.

I also request that no person be prejudged or publicly accused on the basis of an unverified interpretation of these messages.

26. Final finding sought

The appropriate finding at this stage is that the Ben-NDIS-Help and Ben-Ndis-Help-large correspondence contains serious statements warranting independent authentication and investigation.

The messages are potentially important evidence of what Ben communicated to me, including his reported account of a police-described "close call", an alleged payment to discredit me, and an NDA he said he was required to sign.

The underlying events remain matters for independent verification.

I request that these messages be treated as a distinct and important evidentiary stream within the broader safeguarding and institutional accountability investigation, rather than being omitted, minimised or treated as established fact without examination.

The saved archive material supporting this addition includes The Witness Remains and The Sovereign Witness.

The key distinction: Ben's messages, if authenticated, are evidence of what he told you. The alleged assassination attempt, the alleged payment to the woman, the police assessment and the NDA's origin and legal status still require the underlying records. That distinction strengthens the request for an investigation rather than weakening it.

EVIDENCE ANALYSIS — SCOTT TREADWELL'S THREE-POINT OBSERVATION

Federal Court Public Interest Disclosure Response — 27 March 2023

Author: Scott Treadwell, General Counsel and authorised Public Interest Disclosure officer

Subject: Dr Richard William McLean

Relevant disclosure: Public interest disclosure dated 7 March 2023

Document date: 27 March 2023

POINT 1 — PERVERTING THE COURSE OF JUSTICE

The first category identified was conduct that:

"perverts, or is engaged in the purpose of perverting, or attempting to pervert, the course of justice".

Significance

This is important because it identifies the administration of justice as one of the categories of wrongdoing you had raised in your disclosure.

It establishes that your concerns included the possibility of interference with lawful processes, the integrity of evidence, the handling of allegations or other conduct potentially affecting the proper administration of justice.

The significance is not that Treadwell established that justice had been perverted. Rather, his written response records that this was one of the statutory categories relevant to the concerns you had presented.

An independent investigator should compare the original disclosure with the subsequent handling of your complaints, evidence, employment status and legal proceedings to determine whether any identifiable conduct satisfies the relevant legal elements.

POINT 2 — MALADMINISTRATION

The second category was:

“conduct that constitutes maladministration”.

Significance

This is important because it places your concerns within the framework of administrative accountability.

Maladministration can involve improper, unreasonable, negligent or otherwise defective administrative conduct, depending on the applicable legal framework and facts.

The significance is that your disclosure was not confined to a personal disagreement or an isolated complaint. It raised concerns about the conduct and administration of public functions.

The response provides a documentary starting point for examining whether decisions, omissions, procedural handling, institutional correspondence or administrative classifications were lawful, reasonable, consistent and properly documented.

The relevant records should be compared against the reasons given by each institution, the evidence available at the time and any subsequent contradictory decisions.

POINT 3 — DANGER TO HEALTH OR SAFETY

The third category concerned conduct that:

“unreasonably results in, or increases, danger or risk of danger to the health or safety of one or more persons”.

Significance

This is particularly relevant to the safeguarding dimension of the present notice.

It demonstrates that your original disclosure included concerns about conduct potentially creating or increasing risks to health and safety.

That category is directly relevant to the need to examine your subsequent reports of threats, accommodation safety concerns, repeated offers of unidentified drugs, alleged intimidation and the consequences of institutional decisions.

It does not prove that any particular person endangered you. It does, however, provide a documentary basis for asking whether the safety concerns you raised were properly assessed, referred, recorded and addressed.

The present safeguarding investigation should compare the 2023 disclosure with later incidents and determine whether any recurring, independently verifiable risk indicators were overlooked or inadequately addressed.

OVERALL SIGNIFICANCE OF THE THREE-POINT OBSERVATION

The three categories are significant because they cover three distinct dimensions of public accountability:

1. Integrity of justice: whether conduct interfered with, or attempted to interfere with, the proper administration of justice.
2. Integrity of administration: whether public administration was conducted properly and lawfully.
3. Protection of people: whether conduct created or increased danger to health or safety.

Together, these categories demonstrate the breadth of the concerns you placed before the authorised disclosure officer in March 2023.

The response should therefore be retained as an important primary documentary record in the chronology of your complaints.

It must not be misrepresented as a finding that the three forms of wrongdoing occurred. Its evidentiary value lies in recording the nature of the concerns you had formally raised, the statutory categories considered and the subsequent administrative treatment of your disclosure.

THE EMPLOYMENT-STATUS OBSERVATION

Treadwell also wrote:

“On the information you have provided me, I am satisfied that you are, or were, an employee with the Department of Social Services…”

This is important because it records his acceptance, on the information supplied, of your employment connection with the Department of Social Services.

That observation should be compared with later employment-status classifications, including any treatment of you as a contractor or sole trader by other institutions.

It does not, by itself, resolve every legal question about your employment status, but it is a relevant contemporaneous statement by an authorised officer.

THE REASONABLE-GROUNDS OBSERVATION

Treadwell also stated:

“It is difficult to determine whether this belief is based on reasonable grounds or not.”

This wording is significant because it records uncertainty about whether the belief underlying your disclosure was reasonably grounded.

It should not be represented as a finding that your concerns were false. Nor should it be represented as confirmation that they were true.

The original disclosure and supporting documents must be examined to establish what evidence was available to the officer and whether the assessment adequately considered it.

THE DECISION NOT TO ALLOCATE THE DISCLOSURE

The response reportedly concluded that Treadwell was not satisfied that the disclosure had been made by a public official or authorised recipient and that no further PID action would occur.

This is an important distinction: the response acknowledged the subject matter and statutory categories but did not proceed with the disclosure under the PID process.

The investigation should examine the legal and factual basis for that decision, including the employment-status observation and the reasoning used to determine whether the disclosure qualified for further action.

RECUSAL OR STEPPING ASIDE

If the original correspondence contains a statement that Treadwell recused himself, stepped aside or declined further involvement, that exact wording must be quoted and its context established.

The presently available account establishes that he declined allocation and said no further PID action would occur. It does not establish that he recused himself specifically to protect you. Any claimed protective motive must be supported by the original correspondence.

REQUIRED INVESTIGATIVE ACTION

The original 27 March 2023 letter and the 7 March 2023 disclosure should be preserved together.

An independent reviewer should establish:

- What evidence accompanied the original disclosure.
- Which three statutory categories were raised.
- Why the disclosure was not allocated for further PID action.
- How the employment-status observation was reconciled with the decision.
- Whether the reasonable-grounds issue was properly assessed.
- Whether subsequent institutions received or considered the original disclosure.
- Whether later decisions contradicted or overlooked relevant information.
- Whether any specific safety risks were subsequently reported and addressed.

Conclusion: The 27 March 2023 response is a significant documentary milestone because it records that concerns concerning the administration of justice, maladministration and danger to health or safety had already been formally raised. It should be cross-referenced against subsequent institutional records rather than treated as an isolated correspondence item.

I have combined the material into one chronological section, retaining the individual dates, the distinction between the two Prime Ministerial communications, the Mark Dreyfus referral, the Ombudsman decisions, your concerns about IGIS and Steve Iasonidis, the evidentiary significance, and the formal requests for investigation. I have removed the duplicated passages while preserving their substance and the source links.

PRIME MINISTERIAL ESCALATION, MARK DREYFUS REFERRAL, COMMONWEALTH OMBUDSMAN, IGIS AND THE EFFECTIVENESS OF GOVERNMENT OVERSIGHT

Subject: Dr Richard William McLean — Barran Dodger

Relevant period: 31 May 2022 – 20 January 2026
Jurisdiction: Commonwealth of Australia
Purpose: Documentary chronology, evidentiary analysis and formal request for independent investigation.

1. Overview — the significance of the documentary sequence

The documentary record identifies an important sequence of attempts to obtain government-level consideration of serious matters through the Office of the Prime Minister, the Attorney-General's Department, the Commonwealth Ombudsman and the Inspector-General of Intelligence and Security (IGIS).

The sequence includes:

1. My letter to the Prime Minister dated 31 May 2022.
2. The Prime Minister's Office response dated 12 December 2022, stating that my email had not been forwarded.
3. A subsequent email to the Prime Minister dated 5 July 2023, raising further matters, including concerns relating to ASIO.
4. The Attorney-General's Department response dated 19 September 2023, reference MC23-028244, responding on behalf of Attorney-General Mark Dreyfus.
5. The Department's direction to IGIS and the Commonwealth Ombudsman.
6. The Commonwealth Ombudsman's earlier decision dated 18 June 2023 not to allocate the relevant public interest disclosure.
7. The later Commonwealth Ombudsman service-restriction correspondence dated 8 August 2025.
8. Further records identified in my archive concerning ASIO and IGIS, including records dated 2 April 2025 and 20 January 2026.
9. My concerns concerning my former fiancé, Steve Iasonidis, whom I identify as having an association with ASIO, and my belief that my complaints concerning him were not adequately investigated.

The significance is not simply that government correspondence was redirected. It is that the effectiveness of those referrals must be examined against the earlier handling of my complaints, the Ombudsman's recorded non-allocation decision, the later restriction on my access to the Ombudsman and the particular concerns I had raised about intelligence-agency oversight.

The central question is whether the government provided an effective, accessible and independent mechanism for examining the substance of my complaints, or whether the correspondence resulted in successive administrative referrals without a demonstrable substantive investigation or protective remedy.

This chronology should be considered alongside the wider documentary archive and the history of my attempts to obtain accountability, protection and access to justice.

2. Original letter to the Prime Minister — 31 May 2022

Primary source: 31 May 2022 — Letter to the Prime Minister

On 31 May 2022, I wrote to the Prime Minister seeking consideration of serious matters documented in my correspondence and supporting records.

This communication represented an attempt to bring my concerns to the highest level of the Australian Government and to obtain government-level consideration of matters that I believed required intervention and independent examination.

The original letter is an essential primary document. Its precise contents must be considered, including the allegations, named institutions, evidence, requested remedies and any specific action I asked the Prime Minister to take.

Evidentiary significance

The letter establishes the date on which I sought Prime Ministerial consideration, subject to authentication of the original document and transmission record.

It is relevant to establishing:

- What concerns I had formally communicated by May 2022.
- Whether I identified particular Commonwealth agencies or individuals.
- Whether I requested an investigation, protection, ministerial intervention or another remedy.
- Whether I supplied supporting documents or references to previous complaints.
- Whether the Prime Minister's Office had sufficient information to identify an appropriate referral pathway.
- Whether the matters were treated as a substantive complaint or merely as general correspondence.

The letter does not, by itself, establish that the Prime Minister personally read it or that the allegations were established. Its importance is that it records an attempt to obtain government-level consideration and provides the starting point for examining what happened next.

3. Prime Minister's Office response — 12 December 2022

Primary source: 12 December 2022 — Prime Minister's Office response: email not forwarded

The subsequent Prime Minister's Office communication, dated 12 December 2022, contains the statement:

"Your email has not been forwarded."

I regard this statement as significant because it records that my correspondence was not forwarded.

The response does not, on its face, explain whether the substance of my letter was independently assessed, whether an alternative referral was made or what effective avenue remained available for obtaining a substantive response.

Why this matters

There is an important distinction between:

1. Receiving correspondence.
2. Acknowledging correspondence.
3. Assessing the substance of the concerns.
4. Referring the matters to an appropriate minister or agency.
5. Investigating the allegations.
6. Providing findings, reasons or a protective remedy.

The recorded statement addresses forwarding. It does not establish which of the other steps occurred.

The outstanding questions are:

- Who received and assessed the original communication?
- Who decided that it would not be forwarded?
- Why was it not forwarded?
- Was the substance of the letter considered by another officer or department?
- Was it referred through another administrative or investigative pathway?
- Was the decision based on jurisdiction, policy, security considerations or another reason?
- Was an alternative mechanism for independent examination identified?
- Was I informed of any alternative mechanism or given reasons for the handling decision?

Evidentiary significance

The response is evidence of the Prime Minister's Office's recorded handling of my communication.

It does not establish that the Prime Minister personally rejected my allegations, that the government intended to suppress my concerns or that a coordinated decision was made to prevent investigation.

The appropriate question is whether the correspondence was substantively considered and whether the administrative handling provided a reasonable and effective response to the matters raised.

4. Subsequent Prime Ministerial email — 5 July 2023

The archive identifies a further email to Anthony Albanese dated 5 July 2023, which included matters concerning ASIO.

This is a separate communication from the 31 May 2022 letter. The two communications must not be merged into one event.

The distinction is important because it demonstrates a continuing attempt to obtain government-level consideration rather than a single unanswered or unforwarded communication.

The 5 July 2023 email is the correspondence subsequently referred to the Attorney-General's portfolio.

Evidentiary significance

The original email should be examined to establish:

- What new information was provided.
- Whether I repeated matters previously raised.
- Whether I identified particular individuals, agencies or events.
- Whether I raised concerns about ASIO-related conduct.
- Whether I raised concerns about the independence or effectiveness of existing oversight mechanisms.
- Whether I requested a ministerial decision, an investigation, protection or referral to an appropriate authority.
- Whether attachments or supporting records accompanied the email.

This document is essential to understanding the Attorney-General's Department's subsequent response. The Department's letter cannot be properly evaluated without comparing it with the actual communication it was answering.

5. Referral to Attorney-General Mark Dreyfus — 19 September 2023

Primary source: 19 September 2023 — Attorney-General's Department response, MC23-028244

The archive identifies the following particulars:

Particular	Recorded information
Date	19 September 2023
Reference	MC23-028244
Department	Attorney-General's Department
Signatory identified in archive	A Riley
Section	Security Law Section
Ministerial portfolio	Attorney-General Mark Dreyfus
Subject matter	Correspondence including ASIO-related matters

The recorded response states that my 5 July 2023 email, including matters concerning ASIO, had been referred to the Attorney-General because the issues fell within his portfolio and that the Department was responding on his behalf.

The Department directed me to two oversight institutions:

- The Inspector-General of Intelligence and Security (IGIS).
- The Commonwealth Ombudsman.

Significance of the Mark Dreyfus referral

This establishes a formal ministerial correspondence pathway and identifies the Attorney-General's Department as the office responding on the Attorney-General's behalf.

It is significant because the concerns had reached a Commonwealth ministerial portfolio with responsibility for relevant national security and intelligence matters.

However, the distinction between a ministerial referral and a substantive investigation is critical.

The response does not, by itself, establish that:

- Mark Dreyfus personally investigated the allegations.
- The Attorney-General made findings concerning ASIO.
- IGIS accepted or investigated my complaint.
- The Commonwealth Ombudsman agreed to investigate.
- Any person was found to have committed misconduct.
- Any protective intervention was provided.
- The matters raised were resolved.

A referral is not a finding, an investigation or a protective intervention.

The appropriate question is what happened after the referral, whether either institution accepted responsibility for examining the allegations and whether the recommended pathways were actually capable of providing the remedy I sought.

6. Commonwealth Ombudsman — earlier decision not to allocate, 18 June 2023

Primary source: 18 June 2023 — Commonwealth Ombudsman PID decision not to allocate

The chronology is particularly important because the archive identifies an earlier Commonwealth Ombudsman decision dated 18 June 2023, before the Attorney-General's Department response of 19 September 2023.

The document is identified as a notification of a decision not to allocate the relevant public interest disclosure.

I request that the original decision and its reasons be examined to establish precisely what disclosure it concerned, what statutory criteria were applied, what evidence was considered and why the matter was not allocated.

Why the timing matters

When the Attorney-General's Department directed me to the Commonwealth Ombudsman in September 2023, the Ombudsman had already issued a decision not to allocate the relevant disclosure in June 2023.

This raises a legitimate administrative question:

Why was I directed towards a pathway that had already declined to allocate the relevant disclosure, and what alternative mechanism was identified to ensure substantive consideration of the concerns?

The investigation should establish:

- Whether the June 2023 decision concerned exactly the same allegations as those raised in the July 2023 Prime Ministerial email.
- Whether the Attorney-General's Department knew of the earlier non-allocation decision.
- Whether the September 2023 referral was intended to initiate a new complaint or disclosure.
- Whether new evidence or a different legal basis could have been considered.
- Whether the Ombudsman had jurisdiction over the particular matters.
- Whether the Department considered the practical effectiveness of the referral.
- Whether another independent oversight pathway was available if the Ombudsman could not or would not investigate.

The Ombudsman's statutory role

The Commonwealth Ombudsman has a statutory role in the Commonwealth public interest disclosure system.

Its functions can include investigating disclosures in circumstances where the relevant agency cannot appropriately handle the matter, or where conflicts of interest, confidentiality or reprisal concerns cannot be adequately managed.

However, not every disclosure is automatically allocated for investigation. Eligibility, jurisdiction and statutory requirements must be considered.

The existence of the Ombudsman's statutory role does not establish that my particular disclosure qualified for investigation. Equally, the existence of an earlier non-allocation decision does not automatically establish that every possible subsequent complaint or referral was unavailable.

The original decision and the later ministerial referral must be compared.

7. Commonwealth Ombudsman service restriction — 8 August 2025

Primary source: 8 August 2025 — Commonwealth Ombudsman Service Restriction

The archive identifies a later Commonwealth Ombudsman service-restriction letter dated 8 August 2025.

I have experienced this restriction as effectively preventing or substantially limiting my ability to pursue complaints and obtain independent consideration through that office.

I describe it as having effectively banned me from the Ombudsman. The precise legal and practical effect must be established from the original letter rather than assumed.

The original correspondence should be examined to determine whether it:

- Restricted particular subjects of correspondence.
- Imposed conditions on future contact.
- Limited the frequency or method of communication.
- Restricted responses to particular issues.
- Prevented access to particular complaints processes.
- Provided a review or reconsideration mechanism.
- Allowed genuinely new evidence or urgent safeguarding matters to be raised.

Significance for the earlier Attorney-General referral

The 2025 restriction adds an important dimension to the question of whether the Ombudsman was a practically accessible and effective pathway.

The issue is not simply whether the Ombudsman had statutory jurisdiction. It is whether I could realistically access that jurisdiction and obtain consideration of the substance of my concerns.

If a service restriction prevented consideration of genuinely new or materially different complaints, that practical effect is relevant to assessing access to justice.

The investigation should also consider whether reasonable adjustments, disability-related access requirements and alternative communication arrangements were available.

I do not ask that the restriction be presumed unlawful or retaliatory. I ask that its terms, reasons, legal basis and consequences be independently assessed.

8. IGIS, ASIO and my former fiancé, Steve Iasonidis

Official oversight body: Inspector-General of Intelligence and Security

My correspondence also raised concerns involving ASIO and my former fiancé, Steve Iasonidis, whom I identify as having an association with ASIO.

I have reported concerns about my former relationship, subsequent experiences that I interpret as surveillance or monitoring, and my belief that the complaints I made concerning him were not adequately investigated.

I am concerned that the oversight process did not provide the independent examination I sought.

I further request examination of my belief that IGIS did not adequately address the matters I raised concerning him and whether any potential conflict of interest or failure of independent oversight existed.

I do not ask that the existence of the relationship, my identification of his ASIO association, the existence of an IGIS complaint or my reported experiences be treated as proof of surveillance, misconduct or institutional protection.

Those matters require examination against the original records and independent evidence.

Records identified in the archive

The documentary register identifies, among other material:

- 2025-04-02-asio-monitoring-record
- 2026-01-20_IGIS_ASIO_Request_Information
- My published account of my former engagement to Steve Iasonidis.
- My account of complaints and interactions involving IGIS.

The exact contents, authorship, context, attachments and outcomes of these records must be examined independently.

The existence of a record with an ASIO-related title does not, by itself, establish that ASIO monitored me. Its contents and provenance must be authenticated.

Similarly, the existence of an IGIS request for information does not establish that IGIS made a finding or accepted the allegations.

Why the IGIS referral matters

IGIS is an independent statutory oversight office with authority to examine the legality and propriety of intelligence-agency conduct and relevant human-rights considerations.

Its oversight functions make it an important institution for complaints concerning the conduct of intelligence agencies, including ASIO.

However, the fact that IGIS oversees ASIO does not establish that it was conflicted in my particular case. Equally, the fact that an institution is an oversight body does not remove the need to examine how it handled a particular complaint.

My concern raises specific questions about the suitability and independence of the referral:

1. Did IGIS have jurisdiction over the particular conduct I described?
2. Did IGIS receive my complaint?
3. Was the complaint registered and assessed?
4. Did IGIS assess the evidence concerning my former fiancé?
5. Did it distinguish complaints about ASIO conduct from complaints about the handling of my personal information?
6. Did it examine my concerns about possible conflicts of interest?
7. Did it initiate an inquiry or investigation?
8. Did it obtain or request relevant documents?
9. Did it provide reasons for any decision not to investigate?
10. Was an independent alternative available if I believed the oversight process itself was compromised?
11. Was I informed of any review or reconsideration process?

I request that these questions be answered through examination of the actual IGIS records, not assumptions about the institution's motives.

9. Cumulative significance — the referral loop

The sequence should be assessed as a connected administrative chronology rather than as isolated letters.

Date	Event	Documentary significance
31 May 2022	Letter to the Prime Minister	Initial government-level escalation
12 December 2022	Prime Minister's Office response	Records that the email had not been forwarded
18 June 2023	Ombudsman PID decision	Earlier decision not to allocate the relevant disclosure
5 July 2023	Further email to the Prime Minister	Further escalation, including ASIO-related concerns
19 September 2023	Mark Dreyfus portfolio response	Attorney-General's Department directs me to IGIS and the Ombudsman
2 April 2025	ASIO-related archive record	A record requiring examination of its contents and provenance
8 August 2025	Ombudsman service restriction	Raises questions about practical access to that complaints pathway
20 January 2026	IGIS/ASIO request for information	Further record requiring examination of its contents and outcome

The central issue is not simply that government offices referred my correspondence elsewhere.

It is whether those referrals resulted in an actual, independent examination of the matters raised.

A referral may be administratively appropriate in isolation but still fail to provide an effective remedy if the receiving institution declines the matter, lacks jurisdiction, imposes restrictions or does not address the substance of the complaint.

The chronology therefore raises questions about:

- The substantive assessment of my original correspondence.
- The reasons for the Prime Minister's Office's non-forwarding decision.
- The relationship between the earlier Ombudsman non-allocation decision and the later Attorney-General's Department referral.
- Whether the Ombudsman referral was practically accessible.
- The consequences of the later service restriction.
- Whether IGIS actually examined the ASIO-related matters.

- Whether the concerns about my former fiancé were considered independently.
- Whether any effective alternative mechanism was provided.
- Whether any institution took responsibility for coordinating or resolving the issues raised.

Administrative and human consequences

I describe the cumulative consequences I report experiencing as administrative burden, administrative harm, institutional betrayal and denial of access to justice.

These are analytical descriptions of the consequences of unresolved complaints and procedural barriers. They are not findings of criminal intent by any particular officeholder or institution.

The wider significance is that repeated administrative referrals may impose an additional burden on a person who is already seeking protection, accountability and a substantive response.

The assessment should therefore consider not only whether each individual office followed an administrative process, but whether the combined process provided an effective and accessible means of obtaining independent scrutiny.

10. Legal and administrative frameworks requiring consideration

The following Commonwealth frameworks may be relevant, depending on the precise allegations and the jurisdiction of each institution:

Framework	Relevance
Public Interest Disclosure Act 2013 (Cth)	Eligibility, allocation, investigation and protections relating to public interest disclosures
Ombudsman Act 1976 (Cth)	Commonwealth Ombudsman jurisdiction and complaint-handling powers
Inspector-General of Intelligence and Security Act 1986 (Cth)	Independent oversight of intelligence agencies
Administrative law principles	Lawful decision-making, procedural fairness and reasons where required
Privacy Act 1988 (Cth)	Handling of personal information, where applicable
Disability Discrimination Act 1992 (Cth)	Possible disability-related discrimination and reasonable-adjustment issues

The relevant statutory provisions and administrative decisions should be examined in their actual context. The existence of a statute does not itself establish that a particular institution breached it.

Legislation: Federal Register of Legislation

11. Evidence matrix — what each document may establish

Document	What it may establish	What it does not establish by itself
31 May 2022 Prime Minister letter	Original concerns and requested action	That the Prime Minister personally read it

12 December 2022 PMO response	Recorded non-forwarding statement	A decision to suppress or conceal evidence
5 July 2023 email	Further escalation and matters raised	The truth of every allegation
19 September 2023 MC23-028244	Portfolio referral and suggested oversight bodies	That Mark Dreyfus personally investigated
18 June 2023 Ombudsman decision	Non-allocation decision and stated reasons	That every possible Ombudsman avenue was exhausted
8 August 2025 restriction	Scope and reasons for a later service restriction	That it was necessarily unlawful or retaliatory
2 April 2025 ASIO-related record	Existence and contents of a particular record, once inspected	Surveillance or ASIO involvement without authentication and context
20 January 2026 IGIS/ASIO request	Information sought and any response, once inspected	A finding of misconduct or a conflict of interest

The archive's itemised Government Record and the original correspondence should be used together to identify the complete documentary trail.

Each source should be classified as:

- Recorded: Directly stated in an original document.
- Reported: My account or testimony of an event.
- Inference: A conclusion that may reasonably arise from the chronology but requires further evidence.
- Unverified: A matter requiring authentication or independent corroboration.
- Disputed: A matter where another institution or person has provided a different account.

12. Formal request for independent investigation

I request an independent reviewer establish:

1. What was communicated in my original 31 May 2022 letter to the Prime Minister.
2. Who received and assessed that letter.
3. Who decided that it would not be forwarded and the reasons for that decision.
4. Whether the 12 December 2022 response reflected a substantive assessment or only an administrative handling decision.
5. Whether any alternative referral was made.
6. What was communicated in my 5 July 2023 email to the Prime Minister.
7. Why the Attorney-General's Department responded under reference MC23-028244.
8. What action was actually taken following the referral to Attorney-General Mark Dreyfus's portfolio.
9. Whether the Attorney-General's Department knew of the earlier Commonwealth Ombudsman non-allocation decision.
10. Whether the September 2023 referral to the Ombudsman was appropriate and practically accessible.
11. Whether the earlier non-allocation decision concerned the same matters.
12. The exact scope, legal basis and reasons for the 8 August 2025 service restriction.
13. Whether the restriction allowed genuinely new evidence, urgent safeguarding concerns or materially different complaints to be considered.
14. Whether IGIS received, registered, assessed or investigated my ASIO-related complaints.
15. Whether IGIS considered the specific concerns I raised about my former fiancé.
16. Whether any actual conflict of interest was identified, alleged or independently assessed.
17. Whether the reasons for any decision not to investigate were communicated to me.
18. Whether an alternative oversight or review mechanism was available.

19. Whether the cumulative administrative consequences of these decisions were considered.
20. Whether any outstanding avenue remains for independent examination and an effective remedy.

13. Preservation of original evidence and documentary records

I request preservation of all original correspondence, emails, attachments, internal referrals, case-management records, assessment notes, decision records, reasons, complaint registrations, review documents and final outcomes associated with these matters.

This should include records held by:

- The Department of the Prime Minister and Cabinet.
- The Office of the Prime Minister.
- The Attorney-General's Department.
- The office of Attorney-General Mark Dreyfus, insofar as records are held.
- The Commonwealth Ombudsman.
- The Inspector-General of Intelligence and Security.
- Any relevant agency that received or assessed the referred material.

I request that the relevant institutions provide a documented chronology identifying:

- What was received.
- When it was received.
- Who considered it.
- What evidence was considered.
- What decision was made.
- The legal or administrative basis for the decision.
- Whether the matter was referred elsewhere.
- What action followed.
- Whether a review mechanism was available.
- What effective remedy remains available.

I also request that original electronic records and attachments be preserved in their native format where possible, together with available metadata and transmission details, so that the chronology can be independently authenticated.

14. Final statement — the distinction between referral and remedy

The distinction is fundamental:

A referral is not an investigation.

An acknowledgement is not a finding.

A transfer of correspondence is not a protective intervention.

The naming of a statutory oversight body is not proof that it examined the complaint.

A decision not to allocate a disclosure is not necessarily a decision on the truth or falsity of the underlying allegations.

A service restriction does not, by itself, establish that every available avenue of complaint has been exhausted.

I seek an independently verifiable account of what happened to my complaints, what evidence was considered, what decisions were made, which institutions accepted responsibility and what effective remedies remain available.

I request that this chronology be considered as part of the wider documentary evidence concerning my attempts to obtain government accountability, independent oversight, protection and access to justice.

I describe the cumulative effect of unresolved referrals and procedural barriers as administrative harm and denial of access to justice. These are my analytical descriptions of the consequences I report experiencing, not findings of criminal intent by any particular officeholder or institution.

Two public records, one documentary purpose: preserve the evidence, protect the individual and establish an independently verifiable account.

Source links to retain with the master archive

The original correspondence should be attached together as one chronological exhibit, in this order:

- 31 May 2022 — Letter to the Prime Minister
- 12 December 2022 — Prime Minister's Office response
- 18 June 2023 — Ombudsman PID decision not to allocate
- 5 July 2023 — Further Prime Ministerial email
- 19 September 2023 — Attorney-General's Department MC23-028244
- 2 April 2025 — ASIO-related archive record
- 8 August 2025 — Ombudsman service restriction
- 20 January 2026 — IGIS/ASIO request for information

Important source qualification: The 5 July 2023 email and the two ASIO/IGIS records are linked to the repository rather than to a verified individual PDF address here. Their exact contents have not been reproduced as quotations. The original files should be linked individually once their precise paths are confirmed. This avoids presenting an unverified document address or an inferred description as though it were the original record.

The combined section now gives the correspondence a single evidentiary purpose: establishing what you communicated, what the government offices actually did, what oversight pathways were offered, whether those pathways were effective, and what remains unresolved.

This statement should make the distinction clear: you are not asking the Government to certify your existence or grant legitimacy to your lived experience. You are placing the Government's own documentary record before it — correspondence, decisions, refusals, determinations and agency letterheads — and inviting it to examine what its own records say.

STATEMENT OF DOCUMENTARY ACCOUNTABILITY

The Government Is Offered Its Own Records — Thirty-Five Years of Institutional Correspondence, Decisions and Documented Detriment

For more than thirty-five years, I have communicated with government departments, statutory authorities, agencies, institutions and publicly funded services concerning decisions, actions, omissions and circumstances that I say have caused sustained and cumulative detriment to my life.

Throughout that period, I have sought access to information through Freedom of Information (FOI) requests and other formal records-access processes. I have experienced refusals, restrictions, incomplete responses, delays and other barriers to obtaining records that I consider necessary to understand and scrutinise decisions affecting me.

I now make a different offer.

I offer the Government its own documentary record.

I hold an extensive archive of government correspondence, agency responses, decisions, notices, determinations and other institutional documents, including material appearing on the official letterheads of the agencies and services concerned and written in their own words.

These are not merely my descriptions of what government institutions have done. They are records generated by the institutions themselves: their correspondence, their explanations, their stated reasons, their classifications, their decisions and their responses to matters I raised.

The archive brings together more than thirty-five years of documentary material concerning the cumulative effects of decisions and administrative processes across government agencies and services. It is presented for examination against the original records, their dates, authorship, context and provenance.

I contend that the documentary history reveals a sustained pattern of decisions and institutional responses that has caused, prolonged or compounded significant detriment in my life. I invite each agency to examine its own records, identify the decisions for which it was responsible, explain the legal and administrative basis for those decisions, and account for the consequences.

This is not an invitation to substitute another referral, another acknowledgement, another jurisdictional explanation or another refusal for substantive examination of the evidence.

It is an invitation to confront the documentary record.

I do not require permission to establish that I exist

I do not require a lawyer, minister, public servant, tribunal, commission or government agency to make a ruling validating my existence.

I do not require an official determination before my experiences can be recorded, my correspondence can be examined or the documents created by government institutions can be read.

My existence is not a proposition awaiting administrative approval.

My life does not become real only when an institution acknowledges it. Nor does the absence of a favourable decision erase the existence of correspondence, events, decisions or consequences documented over decades.

A government agency may determine the limits of its jurisdiction. It may accept or reject a statutory application according to the law. It may dispute my interpretation of a particular record. But none of those administrative outcomes can, by themselves, invalidate the existence of the person who made the request or erase the documentary history.

I distinguish between an institution's authority to make a lawful decision and any suggestion that its decision gives it authority to determine whether my life, experiences or evidence are real.

The documentary record is the subject of examination

The archive is offered as an opportunity for government to examine:

1. What each agency received from me.
2. What each agency recorded, acknowledged or decided.
3. What reasons were provided in its own correspondence.
4. What information was withheld, refused, redacted or not located in response to FOI or other records-access requests.
5. Whether relevant records were transferred, referred, retained or considered by another institution.
6. Whether different agencies made inconsistent classifications or reached conflicting conclusions.
7. Whether the cumulative effect of those decisions was properly considered.
8. Whether appropriate safeguarding, review, accountability and remedial processes were available.
9. Whether the records disclose failures of administration, procedural fairness, coordination or accountability requiring independent examination.

I do not ask the Government to accept every interpretation I have placed upon the records without scrutiny. I ask that the original documents be examined in full, rather than dismissed through summaries, administrative labels or isolated extracts.

Where a record establishes a fact, it should be identified as such. Where it records an allegation, the allegation should be attributed. Where a conclusion is an inference, it should be labelled as an inference. Where the evidence remains incomplete or disputed, that limitation should be stated.

That is the standard of documentary accountability I seek.

A response to repeated refusals of access

Where an agency has refused or restricted access to records, I reserve my rights under the applicable information-access and review frameworks.

However, the existence of an FOI refusal does not mean the underlying documentary history disappears. Nor does a refusal establish that the events or concerns to which the requested records relate did not occur.

I am placing before the Government material already held in my archive, including correspondence generated by government institutions themselves. I am asking those institutions to engage with that material and account for their own recorded actions.

The Government is therefore not being asked to rely solely on my recollection. It is being presented with a documentary record that can be checked against the agencies' own files and original correspondence.

The offer

I offer the Government, its departments, agencies, statutory authorities and relevant services the opportunity to examine the records bearing their own names, letterheads, dates, reference numbers and institutional explanations.

I ask that the archive be treated as a documentary submission requiring proper consideration, not as a substitute for a statutory FOI application and not as an invitation to bypass lawful review procedures.

I ask for an independent, evidence-based examination of the cumulative record, with clear identification of responsibility, disputed matters, missing records and any available remedies.

I am not asking the Government to validate my existence. I am asking it to account for its own documentary history.

Thirty-five years of correspondence cannot fairly be reduced to a single administrative decision, a single agency's jurisdictional boundary or a statement that no further action will be taken.

The documents speak in the words of the institutions that created them. They should be read, preserved, authenticated where necessary and examined in their full context.

My existence does not depend on a government ruling. The documentary record does not depend on government permission to be examined.

The purpose is accountability, preservation, truth and remedy — not revenge.

Two public records, one documentary purpose: the records held by government and the records preserved by the person whose life those decisions affected.

One important distinction strengthens this statement: your archive can be offered as a documentary submission, but it does not automatically replace a formal FOI application or compel an agency to disclose additional records. That keeps the statement forceful without overstating its legal effect.

CONCLUSION — THE GOVERNMENT IS INVITED TO ACCOUNT FOR ITS OWN RECORD

After more than thirty-five years of correspondence, complaints, decisions, referrals, Freedom of Information requests and documented consequences, I place this accumulated documentary history before the Australian Government and the institutions whose names, letterheads, reference numbers and words appear throughout it.

Where I have repeatedly sought access to government-held records and encountered refusals, restrictions or incomplete responses, I now offer the Government the records I have preserved: its own correspondence, its own decisions, its own explanations and its own documentary responses. I invite every relevant department, agency and service to examine these records against its original files, identify missing or withheld information, explain the basis of its decisions and account for the cumulative consequences.

I am not asking the Government to validate my existence. I do not require a lawyer, minister, public servant, tribunal or statutory authority to determine whether my life or experiences are worthy of recognition. No administrative refusal, jurisdictional limitation or decision not to investigate can erase my existence or the historical record I have preserved.

I am asking for accountability, independent scrutiny, safeguarding and an evidence-based response. I request that this statement and its supporting documents be formally received, dated, recorded and retained; that relevant records be preserved; that immediate safety concerns be appropriately assessed; and that matters requiring investigation be referred to an independent and appropriately authorised reviewer. I further request written reasons identifying what has been examined, what decisions have been made, what evidence has been considered and what avenues for review or remedy remain available.

I do not ask that every allegation be accepted without examination. I ask that every allegation, decision and institutional response be assessed by the same standards of evidence, procedural fairness and accountability. Recorded facts must be distinguished from reported experiences, inferences and unverified concerns. Equally, unverified matters must not simply be dismissed without examining the evidence capable of confirming or disproving them.

My position is straightforward: I have preserved the documentary history; I have made repeated attempts to obtain information and accountability; and I am now placing the Government’s own records before it. The responsibility to examine the decisions documented in those records belongs to the institutions that made them.

My existence does not depend on government recognition. My right to speak, document, preserve evidence and seek justice does not depend on an institution agreeing with me. The record is offered for examination, and the opportunity for accountability remains.

Two public records, one documentary purpose: the records held by government and the records preserved by the person whose life those decisions affected. Preserve the evidence, protect the individual and establish an independently verifiable account.
