I DO NOT NEED YOUR CROWN, YOUR MONEY, YOUR PERMISSION OR YOUR APPROVAL.

I HAVE MY FAITH, MY CONSCIENCE, MY RECORD AND MY GOD.

A first-person Christian testimony on spiritual sovereignty, the blood of Christ, institutional betrayal, the inversion of power, the moral poverty of privilege and the ultimate accountability of every human being before the Creator.

Author: Dr Richard William McLean — Barran Dodger

Document type: First-person prophetic testimony, public ethical declaration, documentary witness statement and call to conscience.

Executive summary

I do not need a government to make me human. I do not need a politician to validate my conscience. I do not need wealth to establish that my dignity exists. I do not need institutional approval to believe that Christ has redeemed me.

My relationship with the Creator is not granted by the state. My dignity is not purchased by wealth. My conscience is not owned by political authority. My faith does not depend on public approval. My testimony must be examined according to its evidence, not dismissed because of my circumstances. And every person who exercises power over another human being remains morally accountable for how that power is used.

I have preserved an archive of official records, government correspondence, whistleblower disclosures, clinical records, prophetic declarations and public publications. The accessible record identifies documents involving Comcare, APRA, the Department of the Prime Minister and Cabinet, the Office of the Australian Information Commissioner, the Federal Court of Australia, the NSW Trustee, Mercy Health, the Commonwealth Ombudsman and IBAC.

I do not ask to be believed without evidence. I ask that my evidence be examined with the same seriousness that would be given to a wealthy, well-connected or institutionally protected person.

Declaration of spiritual sovereignty

I begin where no government can begin: with God.

I do not derive my humanity from Parliament, a department, a police force, a court, a lawyer, a politician, a public servant, a charity, a media organisation or public opinion. These institutions may exercise authority. They may issue decisions, allocate resources and shape ordinary life. But they did not give me a soul. They cannot manufacture my conscience. They cannot forgive my sins. They cannot determine my ultimate spiritual worth.

Your office may confer public responsibilities. Your wealth may purchase material advantages. Neither gives you ownership of my humanity.

I am a Christian. I believe in the Creator, in Jesus Christ, and in redemption through His blood. I believe that grace is not distributed according to social rank, institutional status or public popularity. I believe that Christ's redemption does not depend on whether a department acknowledges me, whether a politician supports me, whether a lawyer represents me, or whether the public finds my account convenient.

> “If God is for us, who can be against us?” — Romans 8:31.
> “In him we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of our trespasses, according to the riches of his grace.” — Ephesians 1:7.

If my worth came from human approval, human rejection could destroy it. If my dignity came from wealth, poverty could erase it. If my conscience belonged to the state, fear could silence it. I believe my life is held by God, and therefore I refuse to let institutional non-recognition determine my humanity.

Spiritual sovereignty does not mean exemption from civil law, a claim to govern others, or a denial of other people’s rights. It means that my conscience, faith and ultimate accountability belong to God, not to temporary holders of public power.

Forgiveness does not mean pretending harm never occurred. Refusing vengeance does not mean surrendering the demand for truth. I can forgive without excusing wrongdoing. I can refuse revenge without abandoning accountability.

What it means to be a witness

I call myself a witness because I have lived through what I describe, preserved what I could, and made my account public.

A witness is not infallible. A witness records experience, preserves what can be substantiated, identifies what the evidence appears to mean, and invites scrutiny.

I distinguish:

- Personal experience: what I lived, perceived, suffered and remember.
- Christian belief: what I hold by faith concerning God, Christ, redemption and divine judgment.
- Documentary fact: what a dated record, decision, letter or publication actually shows.
- Interpretation: what I believe the documents mean.
- Allegation requiring examination: a serious claim that must be tested against primary evidence, context and any institutional response.
- Divine judgment: the final reckoning I believe belongs to God alone.

I do not ask anyone to accept my interpretation merely because I have suffered. I ask that my evidence be examined with the same seriousness that would be applied to a wealthy, well-connected or institutionally protected person.

The inversion of power

The central ethical issue is the inversion of responsibility.

When a person needs assistance, protection, representation or fair assessment, institutions often hold the information, legal knowledge, staffing, funding, procedural control and credibility. The person seeking help may hold little more than lived experience, documents, persistence and conscience.

The inversion occurs when the person with least capacity must perform the work powerful systems should be equipped to perform: retrieving records, identifying exhibit numbers, following correspondence, understanding procedure, preparing submissions, responding to decisions, preserving evidence and continuing to ask questions after exhaustion.

This is not merely inconvenience. It becomes a moral failure when the burden of accountability is shifted onto the very person the system was supposed to assist.

There is a difference between having authority and exercising it responsibly; between holding a position of trust and honouring it; between having legal resources and making justice accessible; between being formally responsible for vulnerable people and actually responding to them; and between using procedure to resolve a problem and using procedure in ways that leave it unresolved.

A system can produce severe human consequences without any single participant openly accepting responsibility for the whole outcome. Each decision may be called routine. Each delay may be attributed to process. Each refusal may be said to follow policy. Yet the person at the centre may be left without assistance, answers, resources or a meaningful path forward.

I do not automatically label every adverse decision deliberate persecution. Those are grave claims requiring evidence of knowledge, intent, pattern, causation and the absence of innocent explanation. But foreseeable risk, ignored warnings, procedural indifference and refusal to confront consequences can themselves raise serious moral questions.

The price of witnessing

The archive records that I describe being unable to leave my present circumstances safely, without reliable transport, with limited money and without the practical support repeatedly sought. It records concerns about access to my Commonwealth Bank account, communications, health and my dog's welfare.

These are not administrative preferences. They are survival-level needs: safe communication, access to money, transport, medical care, disability support, legal assistance, protection and care for a dependent animal.

I do not present disability as moral superiority. I present it as context. When a person has limited mobility, money, communication access and institutional support, the labour of preserving thousands of documents becomes extraordinary. The archive itself describes being built by "one disabled LGBTQ+ PhD whistleblower" with "one broken phone," without legal representation, political backing, institutional support or money.

That context does not prove every claim. It does explain why the demand for evidence-based scrutiny matters: a person should not be dismissed because the act of documenting injustice has consumed the resources needed to live.

The moral poverty of privilege

I would rather stand with God and the truth, with my dog beside me and no audience at all, than purchase belonging at the price of my conscience.

That is not a rejection of help. Accepting practical assistance does not compromise spiritual sovereignty. Needing support does not make a person weak. What I refuse is support that is deceptive, conditional, unreliable or humiliating; support that demands silence or treats a human being as a problem to be managed.

I distinguish wealth from worth, prestige from character, political influence from moral courage, professional status from honesty, a large network from loyalty, public concern from practical assistance, and institutional recognition from the ability to live according to conscience.

I do not say every wealthy person is corrupt or every official is wicked. My point is narrower: material advantage can insulate people from consequences, make it easier to avoid hearing vulnerable people, and allow public image to substitute for moral responsibility.

The archive and the evidence

The archive is public and can be examined through the following primary entry points:

- Public archive site: https://www.barrandodger.com.au/
- Donation and archive-statistics page: https://barrandodger.com/donate

The archive describes itself as containing 2,304 SHA-256 sealed exhibits, 891 Bitcoin blockchain timestamps, 788 freely distributed PDFs and 633,730 verified downloads. Those figures are archive claims about preservation and distribution; they do not by themselves establish the truth of every interpretation placed upon the documents.

Evidence map

No.	Claim / issue	Date / period	Person or institution	Primary source identified in archive	Verified link	What the record is said to establish	What it does not by itself establish	Author's interpretation
1	Comcare claim lodged	25 May 2021	Comcare	Comcare claim, exhibit E13, claim 1326583	Official Government Documents Register	The archive identifies a dated Comcare claim.	It does not itself determine whether the claim was legally justified.	The claim is part of the chronology of my attempt to obtain workers'-compensation recognition.
2	Comcare determination refusing the claim	26 May 2021	Comcare	Comcare determination, exhibit E12	Official Government Documents Register	The archive identifies a dated determination refusing the claim.	A refusal is not automatically proof of bad faith, unlawful conduct or deliberate harm.	I regard the refusal as a central administrative decision requiring scrutiny alongside the underlying claim and later consequences.

No.	Claim / issue	Date / period	Person or institution	Primary source identified in archive	Verified link	What the record is said to establish	What it does not by itself establish	Author's interpretation
3	Federal Court General Counsel assessment	27 March 2023	Scott Tredwell / Treadwell, General Counsel, Federal Court of Australia	Assessment letter dated 27 March 2023	The Final Reckoning	The archive quotes the letter as stating that the author was or had been an employee of the Department of Social Services providing services under the trading name Rich McLean, Arts Life Coach, Peer-Support Worker & Mental Health Advocate. It also records references to perverting the course of justice, maladministration, and unreasonable danger to health or safety.	The quoted passages require comparison with the complete original letter and its full legal context.	I interpret the letter as recording both an employment characterization and serious stated concerns, while saying that protection was not provided.
4	APRA public-interest-disclosure response	5 November 2021	APRA	APRA response	The Final Reckoning	The archive says APRA wrote that the matters were not within its remit and would not be treated as a public-interest disclosure.	A jurisdictional refusal does not determine the merits of the underlying concerns.	I treat the response as part of the pattern of referrals and jurisdictional limits that left the underlying issues unexamined.
5	PM&C freedom-of-information matter	2022	Department of the Prime Minister and Cabinet	FOI/2022/045	The Final Reckoning	The archive identifies an FOI response and subsequent release of documents.	The existence of an FOI process does not itself establish wrongdoing.	I regard the released material as part of the documentary chronology requiring connected examination.
6	OAIC reference	2022	Office of the Australian Information Commissioner	RQ22/00794	The Final Reckoning	The archive identifies an OAIC reference concerning PM&C Outlook items.	The reference number alone does not establish the outcome or the merits.	I include it as part of the record of attempts to obtain access to, and scrutiny of, government material.
7	NSW Trustee vehicle-disposal decision	14 November 2025	NSW Trustee	Vehicle-disposal decision	The Final Reckoning	The archive identifies a dated vehicle-disposal decision.	The decision record does not itself establish motive or unlawfulness.	I treat it as a material event affecting independence, transport and practical capacity.

No.	Claim / issue	Date / period	Person or institution	Primary source identified in archive	Verified link	What the record is said to establish	What it does not by itself establish	Author's interpretation
8	NSW Trustee section 122 document	16 October 2024	NSW Trustee	Section 122 document	The Final Reckoning	The archive identifies a dated section 122 document.	The document must be read in full before conclusions are drawn about its legal effect.	I include it in the chronology of financial and administrative control.
9	Mercy Health discharge summary	9 March 2021	Mercy Health; Dr Michael Lograsso	Discharge summary	The Final Reckoning	The archive states that the principal diagnosis was Adjustment Disorder and that the note for 5–9 March 2021 recorded nil psychotic features.	A clinical record does not independently verify the cause of distress or the truth of every surrounding allegation.	I rely on it as part of my account of the clinical and human consequences of the period.
10	Public-interest disclosures	Various	Commonwealth Ombudsman, APRA, IBAC and other pathways	Public-Interest Disclosure Register	The Final Reckoning	The archive identifies a register of disclosures and institutional pathways.	A disclosure register preserves what was disclosed and received; it does not itself adjudicate the truth of each disclosure.	I present the register as the route through which the disclosure history can be independently examined.
11	Institutional actors and structures	Various	Multiple agencies and entities	Institutional and Entity Register	The Final Reckoning	The archive identifies a register of entities appearing in the material.	Identification of an entity in a record does not establish individual culpability.	The register allows readers to trace responsibility, decisions and correspondence across the chronology.
12	Exhibit descriptions	Various	Multiple	Exhibit Catalogue	The Final Reckoning	The archive identifies an exhibit catalogue organising documentary material.	A catalogue organises evidence; it does not replace examination of each source.	The catalogue is the principal route from claim to primary document.
13	First-person account of exile	Undated	Author	Personal Statement of Exile	The Final Reckoning	The archive identifies the statement as first-person testimony.	Testimony is evidence of experience, not automatic proof of every external fact alleged.	It records the human cost and the sequence as I lived it.
14	Analysis of administrative consequences	Undated	Author	Statement on the Architecture of Erasure	The Final Reckoning	The archive identifies the statement as an analysis of institutional and personal consequences.	Analysis is interpretation, not an independent judicial finding.	It explains why I describe the cumulative effect as erasure rather than a series of isolated events.

The Federal Court record

The archive places particular weight on a letter dated 27 March 2023 from Scott Tredwell, also rendered Treadwell, General Counsel of the Federal Court of Australia. According to the archive's quotation, the letter stated:

> "On the information you have provided me, I am satisfied that you are, or were, an employee with the Department of Social Services, providing services under the trading name Rich McLean, Arts Life Coach, Peer-Support Worker & Mental Health Advocate."

The archive also states that the same response recorded three observations: that the disclosed conduct "perverts, or is engaged in for the purpose of perverting, the course of justice"; that it "constitutes maladministration"; and that it "unreasonably results in danger to health or safety."

My interpretation is that this record matters because it appears to contain both an institutional characterization of my employment status and serious stated concerns, while, in my account, no effective protection followed.

Comcare and the administrative sequence

The archive identifies two closely connected Comcare records:

- E13: Comcare claim dated 25 May 2021, claim number 1326583.
- E12: Comcare determination dated 26 May 2021, rejecting the claim.

The near-contemporaneous dates mean the claim and determination must be read together. The claim shows what was sought and on what basis. The determination shows what was decided and, according to the archive, the stated reasons.

A refusal is a record of a refusal. It is not an unquestionable declaration of justice merely because it carries an institutional name. But it is also not, without more, proof of deliberate wrongdoing. The proper question is whether the decision was reasoned, lawful, procedurally fair, adequately informed and responsive to the material before the decision-maker.

Public-interest disclosures and jurisdictional refusals

The archive identifies an APRA response dated 5 November 2021 stating that the matters were not within APRA's remit and would not be treated as a public-interest disclosure.

It also identifies a wider Public-Interest Disclosure Register concerning the Commonwealth Ombudsman, APRA, IBAC and other institutional pathways.

The ethical issue is not simply whether one agency had jurisdiction. It is what happens when a person with a serious disclosure is referred between bodies, each saying the matter belongs elsewhere, while the underlying allegations and human consequences remain unexamined.

The prophetic and biblical indictment

I believe every human being ultimately stands before God.

> “He has told you, O mortal, what is good; and what does the LORD require of you but to do justice, and to love kindness, and to walk humbly with your God?” — Micah 6:8.
> “Give justice to the weak and the orphan; maintain the right of the lowly and the destitute.” — Psalm 82:3–4.
> “Truly I tell you, just as you did it to one of the least of these who are members of my family, you did it to me.” — Matthew 25:40.
> “Do not be deceived; God is not mocked, for you reap whatever you sow.” — Galatians 6:7.
> “If you continue in my word, you are truly my disciples; and you will know the truth, and the truth will make you free.” — John 8:31–32.

I am not seeking to replace a court with personal vengeance. I am declaring that human power is not the highest moral authority in my Christian worldview.

Questions for those in authority

For every relevant matter, I ask:

- What did you know?
- What did the record establish at the time?
- What responsibility did you hold?
- What action did you take?
- What explanation can you provide?
- What remains unresolved?
- What would you do differently if the same circumstances arose again?

The central prophetic declaration

I do not need a government to make me human.
I do not need a politician to validate my conscience.
I do not need wealth to establish that my dignity exists.
I do not need institutional approval to believe that Christ has redeemed me.
I do not need to pretend that I have never been hurt in order to speak about what I believe has happened.
I do not need to surrender my faith to obtain the right to have evidence examined.
I do not need to hate another human being in order to insist that the truth matters.
I do not need to possess political power to ask whether power has been exercised responsibly.
I do not need to declare myself infallible to demand a fair examination of my record.
I do not need the world to agree with me before I can continue to live according to my conscience.

I have my faith.
I have my conscience.
I have my record.
I have my God.

Final declaration

I will continue to preserve my record.
I will continue to speak according to my conscience.
I will continue to defend my dignity.
I will remain faithful to my understanding of Christ.
I will call for truth and accountability without surrendering my humanity to bitterness or my evidence to exaggeration.

I do not need your crown.
I do not need your money.
I do not need your permission.
I do not need your approval.

I have my faith, my conscience, my record and my God.

Evidence appendix: preservation and verification

The archive states that it uses SHA-256 sealed exhibits and Bitcoin blockchain timestamps. A SHA-256 hash can help verify whether a file matches a previously recorded digital fingerprint. A blockchain timestamp can help show that particular data existed by a stated time, subject to verification assumptions.

Neither mechanism independently proves the truth of every statement in a document, the identity of every author, or the intent of every person named.

Statement of significance

This document preserves a first-person Christian testimony, a public ethical declaration and an evidence map. Its historical purpose is to prevent an account from depending solely on memory, institutional discretion or the goodwill of those challenged. Its spiritual purpose is to affirm that dignity, redemption and conscience do not depend upon state recognition. Its public-accountability purpose is to insist that power must answer for how it is used, especially where vulnerable people are involved.
