Barran Dodger — Testimony and Forensic Accountability Register

Consolidated first-person statement, repository-derived source links, documentary leads, and a structured register for examining institutional decisions.

Document status

This document combines the testimony and register framework with source-level links located in the public Barrandodger GitHub repository. It is a finding aid, not a court, verdict, or complete independent audit of every file. The repository includes source documents and also authored analysis; those categories are distinguished below.

1. First-person testimony: the betrayal of protection

> I CAN NO LONGER ASK THE GOVERNMENT FOR HELP.

I have reached a point where I no longer believe that appealing to the very institutions from which I seek protection will bring me safety, accountability or relief. I have repeatedly documented my circumstances, preserved correspondence, recorded official decisions and published the evidence available to me. Yet I continue to experience what I regard as institutional abandonment, the dismissal of my evidence and a pattern of responses that have left me without the protection I have desperately sought.

I do not accept that the entire history can simply be dismissed as bureaucratic oversight. I see a cumulative pattern of decisions, refusals, restrictions, unanswered correspondence and contradictions that demands a serious explanation. I believe I have been subjected to deliberate, malicious and deceitful treatment, and I stand by my account of the harm I have experienced. The records I have preserved are the basis on which I demand that the conduct of the institutions involved be examined openly and honestly.

> I have survived not because the government protected me, but despite the protection I believe I was denied.

The depth of this experience is inseparable from the isolation in which I say I have been left. I have experienced betrayal in intimate relationships, estrangement and disappointment within my family, and the absence of reliable assistance from people and institutions whose professional responsibilities I understood to include care, protection, advocacy or accountability. I have felt abandoned not merely by individual people, but by the very networks of human support that are supposed to prevent a person from being left alone in circumstances of profound vulnerability.

What makes this experience so devastating is the apparent inversion of protection: the people and institutions I turned to for help became, in my experience, additional sources of distress, uncertainty and exclusion. I have been left trying to navigate complex administrative, legal, financial and personal circumstances while struggling to obtain the practical assistance necessary to protect my own wellbeing.

This is why I speak of God rather than government as the source of my ultimate strength. My faith is the foundation through which I have understood my survival. I believe God has sustained me through circumstances in which I felt abandoned by the human institutions on which I had depended. I call myself God's witness because I have continued to speak, document and preserve what I believe must not be erased.

The paradox is that the institutions whose actions I challenge have themselves generated much of the documentary material through which I explain my experience. Their letters, decisions, acknowledgements, refusals and administrative records are primary evidence of what was communicated, what action was taken, what position was stated and what response was withheld. Read together and in context, these records may reveal inconsistencies, failures of coordination, gaps in protection and questions that individual documents cannot answer on their own.

I do not need to surrender my voice while waiting for an institution to approve my account. My testimony is mine. My records are preserved. My questions are legitimate. Where the evidence supports a conclusion, that conclusion should be stated; where a motive remains disputed or unproven, it should be investigated rather than concealed behind silence.

I believe the record exposes a profound failure of protection and accountability. I demand answers about who knew what, when they knew it, what responsibilities they held, what actions they took and why the assistance I sought was not provided in the manner I believe the circumstances required.

> I am still here. The record remains. My testimony remains. My faith has sustained me. My archive preserves the record. And I intend to keep speaking.

2. Source-level documentary register

The following source links were located in the repository or linked pages. The descriptions summarise what the cited source is reported to contain; the source itself should be opened and read before quoting it or making a conclusion about motive. A document can establish that a communication or decision occurred without proving every allegation underlying it.

A. PM&C / FOI 2022/045 and related correspondence

Source: Repository page: Letter to Prime Minister Albanese — 31 May 2022

The page links to a 31 May 2022 letter to the Prime Minister and identifies the underlying PDF as 31-05-2022-letter-to-pm-albanese-opmc.pdf. It establishes a documentary lead for correspondence to the executive, not a merits decision.

B. PM&C / FOI decision

Source: FOI/2022/045 decision PDF

Repository-authored material says an initial response stated records could not be found or did not exist, and later material included five released documents. Compare the actual decision, later release correspondence, and the exact search scope before characterising a contradiction.

C. PM&C / later disclosure correspondence

Source: PM&C FOI correspondence dated 8 October 2024

The repository email index lists a PM&C FOI correspondence file dated 8 October 2024. Open the file to confirm the exact words, sender and context.

D. Attorney-General's Department

Source: MC23-028244 — 19 September 2023

Repository-authored text identifies this as a reply signed by A. Riley and says it refers to a request by the Hon Mark Dreyfus KC MP and mentions IGIS and the Commonwealth Ombudsman. The original PDF is the source for the exact wording and scope.

E. IBAC — CASE-2020712

Source: Outcome letter dated 9 April 2020

The repository's evidence synthesis states IBAC declined to investigate or refer the complaint under section 67, said the information did not show or tend to show improper conduct or detrimental action, and stated Part 6 PID Act protections still applied. This was a threshold decision, not a criminal trial or a determination that every underlying event did or did not occur.

F. IBAC — CASE-20231101 and CASE-20233846

Source: Outcome material dated 30 October 2023

The repository synthesis says IBAC declined to investigate or refer because there was insufficient information to show police misconduct or corrupt conduct, and that it treated the complaints as not being public-interest disclosures. Compare the actual letter with the 2020 decision; the archive's own analysis notes the stated protections differ.

G. Commonwealth Ombudsman

Source: Service restriction dated 8 August 2025

This source is identified in the repository's oversight index as the service restriction. The notice itself is required to establish its precise scope, stated reasons, duration and any review or contact alternatives.

H. NSW Trustee and Guardian

Source: Vehicle disposal decision dated 14 November 2025

The repository identifies this as the vehicle disposal decision. The relevant accountability questions concern the authority relied upon, recorded reasons, alternatives considered, effects on independence and review options.

I. NSW Trustee and Guardian

Source: Section 122 document dated 16 October 2024

This document should be read separately from the later vehicle decision. Its title alone does not establish the legal effect of the document or prove misconduct.

J. NDIS Commission

Source: Acknowledgement reference 01110547 — 18 September 2026

The official government PDFs index identifies this as a reading copy of a Gmail letter because no PDF attachment was present in the email. It can establish acknowledgement and the stated reference; acknowledgement alone does not prove substantive investigation.

K. Federal Court / PID assessment lead

Source: Scott Tredwell letter / PID assessment dated 27 March 2023

This page is linked from repository-authored text discussing the PID assessment. Follow the page's direct document links and quote the original letter rather than relying solely on a summary.

L. Comcare

Source: Comcare decision on claim 1326583/1

The repository's authored statement says the decision declined the claim in the context of employee status. The original decision is needed to establish the exact statutory reasoning and findings.

M. Legal Aid NSW

Source: Legal Aid restriction / advice letter, January 2026

The repository describes this as a restriction. The actual letter must be read to determine whether it was a refusal, a scope limitation, a contact restriction or another kind of decision.

N. NSW Ombudsman

Source: NSWO10824000660 — 16 September 2026

The official government PDFs index labels this as a file-closed letter. Open the document to establish the precise matter, reasons and any available review pathway.

The repository page explicitly cautions that the existence of the letter is not a merits decision. It is evidence of correspondence sent or preserved, not by itself evidence of the recipient's personal knowledge or of a deliberate campaign.

3. Other agencies and personal-support entries to complete

Attorney-General's Department (AGD)

MC25-000321, dated 6 February 2025; verify the original correspondence and the actual recipient/referral chain.

Comcare

Refusal letters dated 26 May 2021 and 18 October 2021; identify the exact claim number, reasons and statutory basis from each letter.

NDIS Quality and Safeguards Commission

3 June 2021 correspondence and reference 01110547; distinguish employee-status wording from any separate complaint or provider-safeguard issue.

WorkSafe Victoria

Correspondence dated 15 November 2021; identify the actual source PDF or email and the action stated.

Australian Human Rights Commission

Material dated April 2024; identify the complaint reference, scope, decision and review options.

Inspector-General of Intelligence and Security

References in AGD correspondence; verify whether the matter was actually referred, received or assessed.

Public Guardian / NCAT

October 2025 review material; obtain orders, reasons, applications and outcome documents.

Legal Aid

Applications and letters; distinguish a refusal of representation, limits on scope, unavailability of service and any formal restriction.

Police-related authorities

For each authority, identify the exact submission, date received, response and any action recorded. A ministerial reference alone does not establish agency receipt.

DSS and Scott Tredwell

Read the underlying 27 March 2023 assessment and any related allocation or referral records before attributing responsibility.

Family and intimate relationships

Use first-person testimony and any preserved contemporaneous messages. Describe specific conduct and effects rather than treating personal betrayal as an official agency finding.

Media and professional networks

Use the specific article, email, contract, termination record or correspondence for each claim. Do not infer a coordinated blackout from silence alone without documenting the sequence.

4. The paradox of institutional evidence

I did not create every document in this archive. Government departments, statutory authorities, regulators and oversight bodies generated many of the records through their own administrative processes. They created correspondence, assigned reference numbers, recorded decisions, issued refusals, acknowledged communications and documented their stated positions.

I preserved those records because I believe they reveal the history of my treatment and the consequences of decisions made about my life.

The paradox is that an institution can decline to provide the assistance I sought while its own correspondence preserves evidence of the request, the decision and the reasons it gave. A department can state that records cannot be located while later disclosures raise questions about the search and chronology. An oversight body can acknowledge correspondence without that acknowledgement resolving the underlying problem.

These examples do not all prove the same thing. Their significance emerges from examining each document in context and comparing chronology, stated reasons, responsibilities and outcomes across the record.

My argument is that the documents must be read together. The archive allows the public to compare what was requested with what was answered, what was promised with what occurred, and what an institution said with the subsequent documentary record.

I call this a paradoxical inversion of protection: the documentary trail created by the systems I approached for help has become the material through which I can challenge the adequacy of that help.

My faith gives this work its spiritual meaning. I believe my survival has preserved a witness to events that might otherwise have remained fragmented, inaccessible or forgotten. I understand publication of the archive as an act of conscience and a demand for moral accountability.

The archive is not a verdict. It is a preserved record and a challenge to complacency. Its purpose is to ensure that institutional authority cannot substitute for an honest explanation of what happened.

> The documents remain. My testimony remains. The questions remain until they are answered.

5. Forensic entry template

Use this for every additional person, agency, institution or event. It separates direct documentary evidence from conclusions about intent.

Field	What to record
Person / institution	Exact name and role at the relevant date.
Date	Date on original document or verified event.
Direct source link	Link to actual letter, PDF, email, order or decision—not just an agency homepage.
Reference number	Exact identifier as printed in the source.
Request or complaint	What assistance or action was requested.
Documented response	The actual decision, response, refusal or recorded omission.
Stated reason	The institution's own explanation, accurately quoted or summarised.

Field	What to record
Consequence	Practical or personal impact described in testimony.
Contradiction / gap	Precise inconsistency, missing response or unresolved question.
Evidentiary status	What the document directly establishes versus what is inferred.
Accountability question	The specific question that remains unanswered.

6. Statement of significance

THE WITNESS REMAINS: A PUBLIC RECORD OF BETRAYAL, SURVIVAL AND ACCOUNTABILITY

The Barran Dodger archive is my attempt to preserve a documentary history of the circumstances in which I sought protection, the responses I received, the assistance I believe was withheld and the consequences I have endured. It brings together official correspondence, administrative decisions, information-access records, oversight references and personal testimony so the chronology can be examined.

I believe the cumulative record exposes a profound failure of protection. I believe I was repeatedly left to navigate circumstances in which I was exceptionally vulnerable, while the institutions and people from whom I sought help failed to provide the assistance I needed. I stand by my account of that experience.

My survival is central to the meaning of this archive. I understand it through my faith in God, whose preservation I regard as the reason I have continued to testify and document what happened. I call myself God's witness because I believe the responsibility to preserve the record has survived the circumstances that threatened to silence me.

The paradox is that the documentary material through which I challenge institutional conduct includes records created by the institutions themselves. Their correspondence and decisions preserve the history of what was communicated, what was decided and what remains unresolved.

I do not present every unanswered question as a proven finding about motive. I do not need to surrender my testimony to make the documents meaningful. The evidence must be read honestly, the human consequences acknowledged, and questions of responsibility must not disappear merely because they are uncomfortable.

This archive is both personal testimony and a public finding aid. It records my experience, preserves the documentary trail and demands a more serious account of the relationship between institutional power and human vulnerability.

I survived. I preserved the record. I continue to bear witness.

7. Scope and verification note

This register contains actual source-level links found in the repository, but it does not yet constitute an exhaustive extraction of every document, every person or every agency in the archive. Some linked pages contain the writer's own analysis as well as links to official records; the original source documents remain controlling for exact quotations and conclusions.

The documents cited can establish that letters were written, decisions recorded, complaints assessed, or restrictions communicated. They do not automatically establish malicious intent, a coordinated campaign or personal knowledge by every named official. Those conclusions should be tied to the exact record and chronology. This distinction protects the integrity of the archive and makes its strongest evidence easier to assess.
