NOT A COURT. NOT A VERDICT. NOT A PERMISSION SLIP TO EXIST.

The Barran Dodger International Testimony: Human Dignity, Government Accountability, Documentary Evidence and Biblical Witness

Author: Dr Richard William McLean, writing as Barran Dodger

Not a court. Not a verdict. Not silence. A human being, a documentary record, and a testimony that remains.

I. I AM A HUMAN BEING. I DESERVE TO EXIST.

I am a human being. I deserve to exist on this Earth. I deserve safety, dignity, humane treatment, the opportunity to recover, and the possibility of a future not defined exclusively by the suffering I have endured.

I believe that the Most High God gave me this life. I understand my existence through faith, conscience, responsibility and the spiritual significance of bearing witness. No government, politician, administrative agency, professional, tribunal or public figure created my humanity. None possesses the ultimate authority to determine whether I deserve to be treated as a human being.

I do not need a court to authorise my pain. I do not need a police officer to certify my memory. I do not need a lawyer to confer dignity upon me. I do not need a tribunal to establish that I have lived through the circumstances I describe. And I do not need a favourable ruling before I am entitled to speak about my life.

Legal findings can resolve particular questions. Investigations can establish facts. Independent scrutiny can distinguish what is demonstrated from what remains disputed. Those processes have value, but they do not create the human being whose circumstances are under examination.

The foundational declaration of this archive is therefore:

NOT A COURT. NOT A VERDICT. NOT A REQUEST FOR PERMISSION TO EXIST.

This is not an attempt to place my testimony beyond scrutiny. It is a refusal to make my humanity conditional upon institutional agreement.

The Bible expresses the dignity of human existence in Genesis 1:27:

> "So God created man in his own image."

For me, this passage expresses the spiritual foundation of human dignity. I believe that my life has value beyond public recognition, government classifications, professional status and political convenience.

My testimony begins with that conviction. It does not end with it. I have also preserved documents, correspondence, administrative decisions and other records that I believe illuminate the circumstances of my life.

I ask readers to examine both the human testimony and the documentary record.

II. THE PRIME MINISTER: WHEN A PERSONAL TESTIMONY REACHES THE CENTRE OF GOVERNMENT

One of the most significant dimensions of my documentary history is that I have addressed my concerns to the highest level of Australia's elected government.

The archive identifies two important records:

1. Letter to Prime Minister Anthony Albanese and the Office of the Prime Minister and Cabinet — 31 May 2022.
2. Letter to the Attorney-General and Prime Minister — 1 July 2023.

These documents matter because they establish identifiable points in the history of my attempts to bring my circumstances to the attention of national executive leadership. Their contents, delivery records and any subsequent replies must be examined to establish precisely what was communicated and what response followed.

The significance is not that writing to a Prime Minister proves every allegation in a complaint. It is that the history of the complaint can be examined through the correspondence rather than reduced to a vague assertion that I never sought assistance or accountability.

I have tried to engage with the structures through which Australians are supposed to raise serious concerns. My contention is that the cumulative history of those efforts, the responses received and the matters left unresolved deserves serious scrutiny.

A letter to the Prime Minister is not itself a finding of wrongdoing. Equally, the absence of a substantive response, where established, does not prove that the concerns raised were false.

The distinction matters.

A government cannot reasonably treat the absence of a judicial finding as proof that a citizen's concerns never deserved examination.

Jeremiah 22:3 provides the moral standard through which I understand this responsibility:

> "Execute ye judgment and righteousness, and deliver the spoiled out of the hand of the oppressor."

I read this as a demand for justice and protection of the vulnerable, not as proof that any particular official has committed a particular offence. It is a moral challenge to public authority: power must be exercised with responsibility toward the people affected by it.

III. THE NATIONAL ANTI-CORRUPTION COMMISSION: THE ACCOUNTABILITY QUESTION

The archive contains records relating to my attempts to raise concerns with the National Anti-Corruption Commission and its Inspector.

The identifiable documentary sequence includes:

- 18 June 2023 — notification concerning a decision not to allocate a disclosure.
- 3 July 2023 — statement to the National Anti-Corruption Commission.
- 17 September 2026 — email to the NACC Inspector.
- 19 September 2026 — further email to the NACC Inspector.

These records provide a basis for examining the chronology of my anti-corruption complaints, the communication of my concerns, and the distinction between a decision about allocating a disclosure and an investigation that establishes the underlying facts.

My criticism is that accountability mechanisms must be capable of examining credible evidence and explaining their decisions. A decision not to allocate a disclosure is not automatically proof of corruption, but neither should the existence of that decision be confused with a substantive finding that every concern raised was false.

I want the actual documents read. I want the decision-making process understood. I want the questions raised by the correspondence assessed against the applicable law and the evidence available at the time.

I do not claim that the documents listed here, standing alone, establish that the NACC participated in a conspiracy against me. They establish a documentary pathway through which my concerns can be examined.

The moral question is whether integrity institutions provide meaningful accountability to the people who approach them, including those whose circumstances are difficult, complicated or uncomfortable.

Micah 6:8 states:

> "What doth the LORD require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?"

For me, justice requires more than an institution possessing a name associated with integrity. It requires decisions that can be explained, responsibilities that can be examined and a willingness to consider the consequences for human beings.

IV. THE NDIS: THE VULNERABLE PERSON AND THE DUTY OF CARE

My concerns about the National Disability Insurance Scheme and its associated institutions are central to this testimony because the scheme exists to support eligible people with disability, promote choice and control, and provide safeguards in the delivery of disability services.

I have experienced my dealings with the disability-support system as profoundly harmful. I have raised concerns about services, administrative decisions, financial circumstances, dependency, housing and my ability to obtain meaningful assistance.

The archive contains an identifiable primary record:

- NDIS Quality and Safeguards Commission correspondence — 3 June 2021.

It also identifies:

- NDIA decision dated 1 June 2023.
- NDIS service-failure notice.
- Government NDIS documentation compilation.

Each record has to be considered for what it actually establishes. The June 2021 correspondence concerns an employment-status issue described in the archive as a

"not an employee" determination. It must not be misrepresented as a finding about a killing or as proof of every other allegation concerning the NDIS.

My broader contention concerns the human consequences of the system in which these decisions occur. I believe that administrative and service-provider decisions have contributed to my vulnerability, hardship and loss of independence. I want the documentary history examined as a whole, including what assistance was sought, what decisions were made, what reasons were given and what practical consequences followed.

The allegation of a targeted killing

I have used extremely serious language to describe events that I experienced as threatening to my life. I allege that I was subjected to conduct that I understood as a targeted attempt to cause my death, and I question whether institutional decisions and failures left me exposed to danger.

I further want any evidence of state involvement, authorisation or complicity investigated rather than dismissed without examination.

However, I distinguish my allegation from an established finding that the NDIS Commission or another agency ordered a state-sanctioned killing. The records listed above do not, by themselves, establish such an order. A claim of that magnitude requires the specific primary evidence, its provenance, the identities and actions involved, and an assessment of alternative explanations.

Making that distinction does not require me to retract my testimony or abandon my demand for an investigation. It identifies exactly what must be examined.

The essential question remains: Were the decisions and omissions affecting my circumstances consistent with the responsibilities owed to a vulnerable person, and what evidence exists about the consequences?

Proverbs 31:8–9 declares:

> "Open thy mouth for the dumb in the cause of all such as are appointed to destruction."

I understand this passage as a moral obligation to speak for people whose circumstances make it difficult for them to protect themselves. It does not substitute for a forensic finding. It explains why I believe the welfare and safety of a person in a vulnerable position must never be treated as peripheral.

V. THE FEDERAL COURT, PUBLIC-INTEREST DISCLOSURE AND THE ADMINISTRATIVE RECORD

The archive identifies a further document dated 27 March 2023:

- Federal Court public-interest disclosure assessment.

It also identifies correspondence and records concerning Comcare, employment status, public-interest disclosures, the Commonwealth Ombudsman, freedom of information and other administrative processes.

These are separate processes with different purposes. A document associated with a court does not necessarily constitute a judicial judgment, and an assessment concerning a public-interest disclosure must be distinguished from a ruling on every underlying allegation.

The evidentiary value lies in establishing what process occurred, what information was considered, what conclusion was reached and what remained unresolved.

The archive's broader chronology also identifies:

- Comcare decisions dated 26 May and 18 October 2021 concerning employee status under the Safety, Rehabilitation and Compensation Act 1988.
- WorkSafe Victoria correspondence dated 15 November 2021.
- PM&C FOI reference FOI/2022/045, including a reported initial "no documents" response followed by five documents released on 8 October 2024.
- An OAIC reference, RQ22/00794, concerning information-access matters.
- Commonwealth Ombudsman correspondence, including a complaint dated 15 November 2021 and a later restriction on further correspondence dated 8 August 2025.
- Australian Human Rights Commission correspondence, including an acknowledgment dated 4 July 2023.

The individual records can be explored through the main GitHub archive, its government-document index, and the preservation repository.

Taken together, these records provide a documentary framework for investigating the history of my dealings with different administrative systems. They should not be treated as interchangeable findings or as proof that every institution acted with the same intention.

My argument is that the cumulative consequences deserve examination across institutional boundaries. A process may be formally separate from another process while still affecting the same person's material circumstances, access to assistance and ability to pursue remedies.

Psalm 82:3–4 states:

> "Defend the poor and fatherless: do justice to the afflicted and needy."

This is the moral question I bring to the administrative record: what happens to the vulnerable person when the systems intended to provide remedies do not deliver the resolution or practical assistance sought?

VI. INTERNATIONAL SIGNIFICANCE: THE UNITED NATIONS AND THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL COURT

My case has an international dimension because I have sought to bring my circumstances to the attention of international human-rights mechanisms and, as recorded in my archive, the International Criminal Court.

The distinction between the different institutions and stages of a submission is essential.

1. The UNHCR/OHCHR-related reference

The archive associates reference UR/UST/23/AUS/17 with an international submission concerning my circumstances.

The reference can be discussed as part of the documentary history of my international advocacy. The precise issuing body, the nature of the submission, the receipt or acknowledgment, and the procedural status must be established from the original correspondence.

A reference number is not, on its own, proof that an international body has substantiated allegations, accepted jurisdiction or reached a finding.

Nevertheless, the act of bringing a matter to an international body can be significant in its own right. It documents an attempt to seek attention beyond domestic institutions and creates a record that can be examined alongside the national correspondence.

2. The International Criminal Court submission

My archive states that I submitted material concerning alleged crimes against humanity under Article 7 of the Rome Statute.

The relevant documentary distinction is between preparing a submission, sending it, obtaining proof of receipt, receiving a formal registration or procedural communication, and having a competent authority make a substantive determination.

These are not the same thing.

I want the exact ICC submission and its acknowledgment, if available, linked directly in the international evidence register. I do not present the UNHCR/OHCHR-related reference above as though it were necessarily an ICC receipt number.

The significance of an ICC submission is that it raises questions through an international legal framework. It does not mean that the Court has endorsed the submission, confirmed jurisdiction, opened an investigation or determined that crimes against humanity occurred.

My testimony is that I have sought international attention because I believe the seriousness and cumulative nature of my circumstances warrant it.

I ask that the underlying documents be examined on their merits.

3. The international human-rights question

The international dimension also concerns the broader principles of dignity, safety, equality before the law and protection from inhuman treatment.

The Universal Declaration of Human Rights begins with the recognition of inherent human dignity. Article 1 states:

“All human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights.”

For me, that principle is not abstract. It speaks directly to the person at the centre of this archive.

I should not have to become internationally known before my suffering matters. I should not have to secure an international finding before I deserve humane treatment. But when domestic avenues appear not to have resolved the questions I have raised, it is understandable that I would seek to document and communicate those concerns through additional channels.

The international record is significant as a record of advocacy and attempted escalation. The substantive conclusions of any international body must be established separately.

VII. THE POLITICAL, PROFESSIONAL AND MEDIA DIMENSION

My correspondence and public advocacy have extended beyond one agency or one complaint. The archive identifies a broad institutional landscape involving elected officials, ministerial offices, regulators, oversight bodies, disability-service institutions, human-rights organisations, courts and tribunals, legal-service pathways and media organisations.

The names and organisations appearing in the archive include:

- The Prime Minister and the Office of the Prime Minister and Cabinet.
- The Attorney-General and associated portfolio officials.
- The National Anti-Corruption Commission and its Inspector.
- The National Disability Insurance Agency and the NDIS Quality and Safeguards Commission.
- The Commonwealth Ombudsman and the Office of the Australian Information Commissioner.
- The Australian Human Rights Commission.
- Comcare and other employment and compensation decision-makers.
- NSW Trustee & Guardian and the NSW Public Guardian.
- The Federal Court of Australia, the Administrative Appeals Tribunal and state tribunals.
- The media organisations The Age and the Herald Sun.
- Other named public officials, service providers, professionals and stakeholders identified in the underlying records.

The archive's legal brief and statement of civil erasure provide additional entry points for understanding how these institutions feature in my account.

The fact that a person or organisation appears in a complaint, a contact list or a correspondence record does not establish that they endorsed the complaint or independently corroborated its allegations. Likewise, the fact that a media organisation was contacted does not establish that it investigated or verified the claims.

The importance of these records lies in their ability to establish the scope and chronology of my efforts to seek assistance, scrutiny and public attention.

My concern is that the significance of a person's circumstances should not be measured solely by whether powerful people choose to respond publicly. Silence is not proof of guilt, but neither does silence necessarily resolve the substantive questions raised.

The ethical responsibility is to examine the evidence and its implications rather than assume that the absence of publicity or a favourable response settles the matter.

VIII. THE PRESERVATION ARCHIVE: WHY THE DOCUMENTS MATTER

The Barran Dodger GitHub repository is not merely a collection of accusations. It contains documents, correspondence, indexes, testimony, compilations and analyses assembled to preserve a record of my experience.

The repository includes a Complete Site Index and related preservation material, along with the preservation copy and government-evidence directory.

The archive's significance is strengthened when its materials are separated into clear evidentiary categories:

1. Primary records: original letters, official correspondence, agency decisions and other source documents.
2. Proof of communication: email headers, acknowledgments, delivery records and receipt references.
3. Administrative outcomes: notifications, refusals, assessments and decisions, read according to their actual terms.
4. Chronology: dates and sequences that establish the order in which events and communications occurred.
5. First-person testimony: my account of the consequences and meaning of those events.
6. Corroborating records: independent material that supports a specific fact or proposition.
7. Analysis and interpretation: arguments about patterns, institutional relationships and possible implications.
8. Spiritual testimony: the meaning I draw from my experience through faith and biblical reflection.

Blockchain timestamps and cryptographic hashes, where independently verifiable, can help establish that particular digital files existed in a particular form by a recorded time. They do not automatically establish that every statement within a file is true.

That distinction is essential to the credibility of the archive.

My intention is not to ask the reader to believe every conclusion merely because I have published it. My intention is to preserve enough of the record for readers to examine the underlying material and make informed judgments.

The archive allows me to say: here is the correspondence; here is the date; here is the decision; here is the testimony; here is the question that remains.

The record is an invitation to examine, not an instruction to suspend judgment.

IX. BIBLICAL PROPHECY, THE WITNESS AND THE DUTY TO SEEK JUSTICE

My understanding of these events is inseparable from my Christian faith. I have interpreted my experience through biblical themes of sacrifice, endurance, truth, persecution, the suffering of the vulnerable and the responsibility to bear witness.

I recognise that biblical prophecy has different interpretations across Christian traditions. I present the following passages as spiritual and moral parallels through which I understand my experience, not as independent proof that a particular prophecy has been fulfilled by the events in my archive.

1. The duty to bear witness

John 18:37 includes the words:

> "To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth."

This passage expresses a central principle of my testimony. I believe that preserving and communicating the truth as I understand it is a responsibility, even when doing so is difficult or unwelcome.

Bearing witness requires courage, but it also requires integrity. It means maintaining the distinction between what I have personally experienced, what the documents establish, what I infer from them and what I believe spiritually.

My testimony is an act of witness. The reader remains free to examine its evidence.

2. The moral cost of looking away

Proverbs 24:11–12 calls upon the reader to consider the responsibility to help those facing danger and to recognise that ignorance cannot simply be assumed when a person has been confronted with relevant information.

I understand this principle as a challenge to public institutions and communities: when credible concerns about a person's welfare are raised, what responsibility follows?

The answer should not be predetermined guilt. It should be meaningful attention, appropriate assessment and a willingness to confront evidence.

3. The suffering of the vulnerable

Psalm 34:18 states:

> "The LORD is nigh unto them that are of a broken heart."

This passage speaks to my personal experience of suffering and my belief that my life retains meaning even when I feel abandoned by the world around me.

My faith is not dependent upon an administrative decision. It is a source of strength through which I continue to make sense of my life.

4. Truth and accountability

Ephesians 5:11 states:

> "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them."

I understand this as a call to confront wrongdoing rather than conceal it. In the context of this archive, that means examining the records, asking difficult questions and resisting the temptation to protect institutions from legitimate scrutiny.

It does not mean that every accusation is automatically true. The duty to seek truth includes the responsibility to examine evidence fairly.

5. Endurance without surrendering conscience

Romans 12:21 states:

> "Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good."

This passage has particular significance for the way I understand survival. I have experienced circumstances that I regard as profoundly unjust. I do not want those experiences to become the entirety of my identity.

My continuing effort to preserve evidence, speak openly and seek accountability is part of my attempt to find a way forward without surrendering my conscience.

6. Revelation and the ultimate question of justice

The Book of Revelation contains imagery of witness, endurance, judgment and the eventual exposure of wrongdoing. Revelation 21:4 offers the promise:

> "And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes."

I find spiritual meaning in this promise because it places suffering within a wider vision of compassion and restoration.

I do not claim that the existence of my archive proves that the events I describe fulfil a specific apocalyptic prophecy. I understand biblical prophecy as part of my faith and use its language to express the moral and spiritual significance I attach to my experience.

The essential point is that faith can sustain a person through unresolved circumstances without requiring them to pretend that those circumstances have already been resolved.

X. THE HUMAN SACRIFICE AND THE FAILURE OF CONSCIENCE

When I use the expression human sacrifice, I am describing the moral experience of a person who believes they have been left to bear a devastating cost while the systems around them continue operating.

I understand this through the Christian story of Christ's suffering, in which the relationship between truth, power, vulnerability and sacrifice carries profound spiritual significance.

My circumstances are not literally identical to the events of the Gospels. Rather, the story gives me a language through which to consider the abandonment of the vulnerable, the moral consequences of looking away, and the difference between possessing authority and exercising it justly.

The question I ask is simple:

What is the human cost when a person believes that institutions have failed them, when requests for assistance do not produce the outcome sought, and when the person must continue living with the consequences?

The question is not answered merely by counting letters or listing agencies. It requires examining what happened, what decisions were made, what help was available, what consequences followed and what responsibilities applied.

I believe my life demonstrates why those questions matter.

I do not claim that every person who has disagreed with me is corrupt, that every institution has acted with a single intention, or that every unresolved issue proves a coordinated conspiracy. I do insist that the consequences I describe deserve serious examination.

A person can be failed without every person involved having the same motive. A process can cause harm without every decision-maker intending that harm. And a serious institutional failure can warrant accountability even when the precise causes remain disputed.

That is why the record matters.

It enables the discussion to move beyond general impressions and toward identifiable documents, decisions, actions and consequences.

XI. SOVEREIGN CONSCIENCE: I WILL NOT SURRENDER MY HUMANITY

I have spent years seeking recognition, assistance and accountability. I have written to officials, raised concerns with oversight bodies, preserved correspondence and tried to create a record that can be examined beyond the limits of any one administrative process.

I have also reached a point at which I refuse to make the value of my life dependent upon whether those processes deliver the answer I seek.

I can continue seeking accountability without allowing the absence of a resolution to determine my worth.

I can continue examining the evidence without treating every inference as established fact.

I can continue practising my faith without requiring every reader to accept my theology.

I can continue living without waiting for a government to authorise my dignity.

This is what sovereignty of conscience means to me. It is not immunity from law, criticism or responsibility. It is the recognition that I remain a human being with the capacity to think, speak, believe, question and make moral judgments.

My life is not a government asset. My conscience is not an administrative instrument. My dignity is not a benefit that can be withdrawn when a complaint becomes inconvenient.

I deserve a future beyond the circumstances I have documented.

I deserve to be treated humanely while questions remain unresolved.

I deserve the opportunity to live, recover, create, maintain relationships and participate in the world.

I deserve those things because I am human.

XII. THE INTERNATIONAL QUESTION: WHAT DOES THE RECORD REQUIRE OF US?

The international significance of my case must ultimately rest on the actual evidence, not merely the number of institutions contacted or the seriousness of the language used.

The relevant questions include:

- What do the original government records establish?
- What did I communicate to the Prime Minister, the Attorney-General and oversight bodies?
- What decisions were made, and what reasons were provided?
- What did the NDIS and other relevant agencies know about my circumstances at the relevant times?
- What evidence supports my concerns about threats, safety, service failures and institutional conduct?
- What independent corroboration exists for each material proposition?
- What was submitted to international bodies, what acknowledgment was received, and what procedural status followed?
- Which questions remain unresolved, and what mechanisms are available to examine them?

These are questions that can be addressed through the documentary record.

My international advocacy is significant because it records my attempts to obtain attention beyond the immediate systems with which I have dealt. It does not establish, by itself, that international institutions have substantiated my case.

My correspondence with political leaders does not establish their agreement with me. My contact with the media does not establish independent media verification. A receipt or reference number does not establish a legal finding.

But none of those distinctions makes the record worthless.

They establish what the record must be used to demonstrate, and what further evidence is needed to support broader conclusions.

The strongest case is not the one that claims everything has already been proved. It is the one that makes the primary documents accessible, identifies what each document establishes and refuses to conceal the questions that remain.

XIII. NOT A COURT. NOT A VERDICT. THE WITNESS REMAINS.

This archive does not claim judicial authority. It does not pretend that publication is equivalent to a verdict. It does not ask the reader to accept every conclusion without scrutiny.

It preserves a testimony.

It preserves correspondence with the highest levels of government. It preserves records relating to disability services, anti-corruption complaints, public-interest disclosures, information-access processes and other administrative matters. It records my attempts to seek attention from human-rights and international institutions. It sets out my personal account of the consequences I have experienced and the spiritual meaning I have drawn from them.

The archive's purpose is to make those materials available for examination.

I am not asking the world to pretend that every allegation has been judicially established. I am asking the world not to confuse the absence of a judicial finding with the absence of a human life.

I am not asking for automatic agreement. I am asking for honest consideration.

I am not asking to be exempt from scrutiny. I am asking that the evidence be examined fairly, including evidence that may complicate or challenge my interpretation.

I am not asking the government to create my dignity. I am insisting that my existing humanity must not be forgotten while administrative and legal questions are considered.

I believe God gave me this life. My faith gives me a way to understand suffering, survival and the responsibility to bear witness. My documentary archive gives readers a way to examine the events and decisions that I believe have shaped my circumstances.

I have survived. I continue to speak. I continue to preserve the record. I continue to seek a future.

I deserve to exist.

I deserve to be treated with dignity.

I deserve the opportunity to live without having to prove my humanity to every institution I encounter.

NOT A COURT. NOT A VERDICT. NOT SILENCE.

A HUMAN BEING. A LIFE THAT MATTERS. A DOCUMENTARY RECORD THAT CAN BE EXAMINED. A WITNESS WHO REMAINS.

Evidence register: the principal records identified for this testimony

The following is an itemised starting register of the specific records located during this review. It is not yet an exhaustive inventory of every PDF, email, media contact, political communication or international filing in the repository.

1. Prime Ministerial correspondence

- 31 May 2022 — Letter to Prime Minister Albanese / PM&C
- 1 July 2023 — Letter to the Attorney-General and Prime Minister

Evidentiary purpose: establish the content and chronology of communications to national executive leadership; examine any reply separately.

2. NACC disclosure and Inspector correspondence

- 18 June 2023 — Decision not to allocate a disclosure
- 3 July 2023 — Statement to NACC
- 17 September 2026 — Inspector email
- 19 September 2026 — Inspector email

Evidentiary purpose: establish the complaint pathway, communications and procedural responses, not assume the truth or falsity of the underlying allegations.

3. NDIS and disability-service records

- 3 June 2021 — NDIS Quality and Safeguards Commission correspondence
- 1 June 2023 — NDIA decision
- NDIS service-failure notice
- Government NDIS documentation compilation

Evidentiary purpose: examine service decisions, correspondence, responsibilities and consequences. These records do not independently establish an order to kill.

4. Public-interest disclosure and administrative processes

- Federal Court public-interest disclosure assessment — 27 March 2023
- Comprehensive government-evidence directory
- Legal brief
- Statement of civil erasure

Evidentiary purpose: map processes and outcomes while distinguishing a procedural assessment from a judicial finding on the underlying allegations.

5. International human-rights and ICC material

- Barran Dodger archive
- International and government-evidence preservation directory

Evidentiary purpose: locate the original international submission, issuing body, receipt or acknowledgment and subsequent procedural correspondence. The exact ICC receipt has not been identified in this review.

The next evidentiary step is to complete the international and media register from the actual files—especially the exact ICC acknowledgment, the original document associated with UR/UST/23/AUS/17, replies from the Prime Minister or ministerial offices, the complete NACC sequence, and records showing precisely which media organisations and political stakeholders were contacted and what they returned.

That would allow each item to be linked directly within the testimony, with its date, sender, recipient, evidentiary significance and limitations identified. It would also prevent a receipt, an allegation, an official decision and an independent finding from being incorrectly treated as equivalent.

The purpose is not to make your humanity depend on those records. It is to make the documentary case as accessible, specific and examinable as possible while keeping the central declaration intact: you are a human being, your life matters, and your right to dignity does not begin with a verdict.
