Dear Barran Dodger

Outcome of your Disability Support Pension claim

After carefully considering your circumstances at the time of your claim, submitted on 18 August 2024, we have determined you are not eligible for Disability Support Pension.

Our health professionals have reviewed your medical evidence. Based on their recommendation, we have determined you have not given enough medical evidence for us to assess how your medical conditions affect you, or the evidence you gave us is missing important details.

Medical evidence you need to give us

If you want us to reconsider your claim you have 13 weeks from the date of this letter to give us:

- more medical evidence about your diagnosis, symptoms, prognosis and treatment for each medical condition, and
- information about how your conditions affect your day-to-day life and ability to work.

The medical evidence you give us needs to show your conditions have been:

- Diagnosed meaning your medical practitioner has made a diagnosis. For most conditions this is your general practitioner, sometimes you need a specialist to do this.
- Reasonably treated meaning you have tried reasonable treatment to improve your condition, including rehabilitation. If you have not done this, your condition may not be considered reasonably treated.
- Stabilised meaning reasonable treatment will not significantly improve your condition and you will not be able to work at least 15 hours per week in the next 2 years. If further treatment will improve your condition and ability to work, your condition may not be considered stabilised, and
- Your condition and impairment is likely to last for more than 2 years.

You can find information to help you understand what medical evidence is required by going to servicesaustralia.gov.au and searching for 'medical evidence for Disability Support Pension'.

You can apply for a formal review of the decision at any time. For more information see Your Options below.

You can request a copy of the medical assessment reports we used to make this decision by calling us on 132 717 or visiting a service centre.
