WYONG MENTAL HEALTH: WHERE WAS YOUR CONCERN WHEN I NEEDED PROTECTION, NOT ANOTHER INSTITUTIONAL INTERVENTION?

What gives Wyong Mental Health the audacity to telephone me and ask how I am going, as though a superficial welfare check somehow absolves the mental health system of its responsibility to acknowledge the circumstances in which I have been left to survive?

You know my history. You know about my treatment, my poverty, my complaints, my experiences of alleged abuse and neglect, my struggle for basic financial security, and the extraordinary circumstances in which I am trying to maintain my independence and dignity.

So what exactly is this telephone call about?

Is it genuine concern? Is it a clinical follow-up? Is it a safeguarding inquiry? Has somebody raised a concern about my circumstances? Has an assessment or referral been contemplated? Has anyone considered the consequences of another institutional intervention in a life already burdened by institutional failures?

Because I am not going to pretend that I have no reason to be apprehensive.

I have experienced a mental health system in which I believe my circumstances and complaints have not always been properly understood, and where the consequences of institutional decisions can be devastating. I have every right to question whether another telephone call represents meaningful assistance or the beginning of another process over which I have little control.

LET ME MAKE MY POSITION UNMISTAKABLY CLEAR.

I do not want to be removed from my home. I do not want to be separated from my dog. I do not want my poverty, vulnerability, complaints or requests for assistance turned into reasons to subject me to another psychiatric intervention.

I want to live safely in my home. I want to retain my independence. I want my dog beside me. I want appropriate support, not another institutional process that potentially strips away the very things that make life bearable.

My dog is my companion. My home is my security. My independence is fundamental to my dignity.

Neither should become collateral damage in an institutional response to circumstances that demand practical assistance, accountability and safeguarding.

And I want Wyong Mental Health to understand something else:

A PERSON'S DISTRESS CANNOT BE PROPERLY UNDERSTOOD WITHOUT EXAMINING THE CONDITIONS THAT PRODUCED IT.

You cannot disregard poverty and then treat the consequences of poverty as an isolated psychiatric problem.

You cannot disregard reports of abuse and neglect and then pretend that another clinical assessment addresses the underlying circumstances.

You cannot ignore someone's struggle to secure accommodation, financial access, safety and appropriate disability support and then congratulate yourselves for making a welfare telephone call.

You cannot expect unquestioning trust from someone whose previous experiences of institutional treatment have left them deeply apprehensive about the system.

If you genuinely care about my wellbeing, demonstrate that concern through transparency, practical support, proper safeguarding and respect for my rights.

If this was simply a welfare call, explain that. If there is an assessment, referral, recommendation or proposed intervention, disclose it. Tell me what information has been recorded, who has access to it and what, if anything, is being contemplated concerning my accommodation or treatment.

I will not accept intimidation, coercion or the presumption that asking difficult questions somehow makes me less entitled to dignity, independence and respect.

I am not asking to be abandoned. I am asking not to be controlled.

I am not refusing legitimate support. I am refusing to have support confused with the removal of autonomy.

I am not asking for special treatment. I am demanding that I be treated as a human being with rights.

THE MENTAL HEALTH SYSTEM DOES NOT OWN MY LIFE.

My home is not yours to casually put at risk. My relationship with my dog is not yours to disregard. My complaints are not yours to silence. My vulnerability is not permission to override my dignity.

If Wyong Mental Health wants to know how I am going, perhaps it should begin by asking what has happened, what assistance has actually been provided, what remains unresolved, and why I am still having to fight so hard for the basic conditions necessary to live safely.

I HAVE SURVIVED ENOUGH INSTITUTIONAL DISAPPOINTMENT TO KNOW THAT A TELEPHONE CALL IS NOT ACCOUNTABILITY.

SHOW ME THE CARE. SHOW ME THE SAFEGUARDING. SHOW ME THE RESPECT. SHOW ME THE PRACTICAL ASSISTANCE.

Do not offer me another revolving door into a system when what I am asking for is the opportunity to remain safely at home, with my dog, my dignity and my independence intact.

I AM A HUMAN BEING, NOT AN INSTITUTIONAL CASE FILE. AND MY RIGHT TO LIVE WITH DIGNITY DOES NOT DISAPPEAR BECAUSE I HAVE HAD TO ASK FOR HELP.

THE DECLARATION

I REFUSED TO DIE IN THE ASHES OF HUMAN BETRAYAL.

An uncompromising declaration of survival, defiance, truth, faith and the demand for accountability.

I REFUSED TO DIE IN THE ASHES OF HUMAN BETRAYAL.

I have had enough.

Enough of the silence. Enough of the institutional cowardice. Enough of the bureaucratic deception, the convenient amnesia, the shifting responsibility, the character assassination and the extraordinary arrogance of people who appear to believe that a government position, professional title, institutional affiliation or taxpayer-funded salary somehow places them beyond accountability.

I refuse to accept corruption dressed up as administration. I refuse to accept cruelty disguised as duty of care. I refuse to accept neglect repackaged as professional discretion, intimidation presented as safeguarding, or the psychological manipulation of a vulnerable person as a substitute for answering legitimate questions.

And I absolutely refuse to accept being gaslit into believing that what I have experienced, documented, reported and preserved somehow ceases to matter because the people responsible would prefer that I stop talking.

I AM NOT GOING TO DISAPPEAR TO MAKE OTHER PEOPLE'S LIVES MORE COMFORTABLE.

I refused to die in the ashes of human betrayal.

I survived homelessness. I survived poverty. I survived displacement, institutional abandonment, the loss of independence, the collapse of relationships and circumstances in which I struggled to see any realistic prospect of rebuilding an ordinary human life.

I survived when the practical foundations of my existence had been stripped away. I survived when the assistance I needed was not forthcoming. I survived when I had to fight for the most elementary things that a person should never have to beg for: a home, money, safety, transport, medicine, legal representation, dignity and the freedom to make decisions about my own life.

And I did not merely remain alive.

I healed. I rebuilt. I found happiness again. I recovered my capacity to dream. I preserved my testimony. I documented the history. I continued speaking.

I did all of this without the rescue that I had desperately needed.

That is the part of my story that nobody gets to rewrite.

I WILL NOT BE INTIMIDATED INTO SILENCE.

I will not bow to people who mistake vulnerability for weakness.

I will not surrender my dignity to officials who believe their authority gives them permission to disregard the humanity of the person standing before them.

I will not accept the ridiculous proposition that a person can be deprived of practical independence, denied meaningful assistance, deprived of access to resources, subjected to repeated institutional interventions and then blamed for the distress created by those circumstances.

I will not accept the inversion of responsibility in which the person asking for protection becomes the problem, the person reporting alleged wrongdoing becomes the threat, and the institutions being asked to account for their conduct become the judges of whether the questions should ever have been asked.

I know what institutional power looks like when it is exercised against someone who has very little power of their own.

I know what it feels like to have to explain the same circumstances repeatedly, to encounter another referral, another unanswered email, another administrative barrier and another person who appears more concerned about protecting an organisation than understanding the human consequences of its decisions.

I will not accept that as normal.

I will not accept it as inevitable.

And I will not pretend that it is acceptable simply because it happens behind government letterheads.

A PUBLIC SERVICE POSITION IS NOT A LICENCE TO ABUSE THE PUBLIC.

A professional qualification is not a certificate of moral superiority. A managerial position is not immunity from scrutiny. A government contract is not permission to exploit the person whose support is being funded. And a salary paid from public money does not purchase the right to abandon the very person one is employed to assist.

If people have acted lawfully, ethically and in good faith, they should have nothing to fear from independent examination of their decisions.

If they have not, they should not expect their titles, colleagues, institutions or professional networks to shield them from accountability.

I REFUSE TO ACCEPT THE CORRUPTION OF THE TRUTH.

For too long, I have experienced what I regard as a devastating inversion of reality.

I have raised concerns about my safety and welfare. I have requested assistance. I have questioned financial decisions. I have sought access to legal representation. I have challenged restrictions affecting my independence. I have asked for records, explanations and accountability.

Yet the consequences I describe have continued to accumulate.

I will not accept another convenient explanation that avoids the substance of the questions.

I will not accept another attempt to reduce an extensive documentary history to a personality issue, a behavioural problem or a psychiatric label.

I will not accept the weaponisation of vulnerability to discredit testimony without examining its contents.

A person's distress does not automatically invalidate their evidence. A person's disability does not extinguish their civil rights. A person's psychiatric history does not give institutions permission to disregard documentary evidence. And disagreement with an allegation does not constitute its disproof.

EXAMINE THE DOCUMENTS. ANSWER THE QUESTIONS. ACCOUNT FOR THE DECISIONS.

That is what I have been asking for.

I do not need another person to tell me that my concerns are complicated. I need the original records examined, the relevant decisions explained, the financial transactions reconciled and the responsibilities of the institutions involved independently scrutinised.

I will not accept the protection of institutional reputations at the expense of an individual's humanity.

THIRTY-FIVE YEARS OF DOCUMENTS. THIRTY-FIVE YEARS OF QUESTIONS.

I have preserved an extraordinary documentary history spanning approximately thirty-five years.

Government correspondence. Official decisions. Agency records. Legal documents. Financial correspondence. Complaints. Responses. Refusals. Contradictions. Unanswered questions.

Documents bearing the letterheads of the institutions whose conduct I have questioned.

I do not need those institutions to grant me permission to exist, to speak, to publish my testimony or to ask for an independent examination.

Their documents are their documents.

Their correspondence is their correspondence.

Their decisions are their decisions.

And my testimony is my testimony.

I have preserved the distinction between what a document establishes, what I personally experienced, what I allege and what remains to be independently verified.

I will not manufacture evidence. I will not conceal inconvenient material. I will not pretend an allegation is a judicial finding.

But neither will I allow an institution to escape scrutiny simply because the allegations are uncomfortable.

The documentary record deserves examination on its merits.

The central paradox is extraordinary: I have spent years preserving records from institutions whose decisions I say contributed to the destruction of my independence and dignity. Those records now provide the material through which their conduct can be examined.

THE RECORD DOES NOT NEED THEIR PERMISSION TO BE EXAMINED.

My survival is not dependent upon their acknowledgement.

My testimony is not dependent upon their approval.

And the historical record does not disappear because someone would rather not discuss it.

I WILL NOT ACCEPT BEING FINANCIALLY TRAPPED AND THEN BLAMED FOR MY CIRCUMSTANCES.

There is something profoundly wrong with a system in which a person can repeatedly ask for the practical means to leave an unsafe or distressing situation and still find themselves without the resources to exercise that choice.

I want my independence.

I want access to my money.

I want my vehicle or an appropriate resolution of its removal.

I want legal representation.

I want safe accommodation.

I want access to the medicine and practical support I need.

I want the ability to make ordinary decisions without having to navigate an extraordinary web of administrative restrictions.

These are not extravagant demands.

They are the ordinary conditions of human dignity.

I have described what I believe to be a cumulative process of institutional and financial disempowerment: the removal or restriction of income, compensation, money, housing, transport, safety, employment opportunities, human rights and access to legal remedies.

I call this:

THE SYSTEMIC REMOVAL OF THE ATTRIBUTES NECESSARY TO LIVE WITH DIGNITY IN A DEMOCRACY.

When someone is deprived of the practical means to participate in society, formal declarations of rights become increasingly hollow.

It is not enough to tell someone they are free if they have no practical means of leaving.

It is not enough to tell someone they have legal rights if they cannot obtain legal representation.

It is not enough to tell someone they are protected if their requests for safeguarding are not meaningfully addressed.

It is not enough to tell someone they are supported if the support arrangements leave them dependent, financially restricted and unable to exercise independent choices.

And it is certainly not acceptable to create or perpetuate circumstances in which a person cannot leave, then criticise them for remaining.

I will not accept that contradiction.

TO EVERY PERSON WHO HAS BENEFITED FROM MY POWERLESSNESS.

I want this understood.

I am not impressed by your job title.

I am not intimidated by your organisational hierarchy.

I am not persuaded by your professional language.

I am not going to mistake your silence for innocence, your authority for integrity or your refusal to answer for an adequate explanation.

If you exercised authority over decisions affecting my life, I expect those decisions to withstand scrutiny.

If you received information about my circumstances, I expect the handling of that information to be examined.

If you were responsible for safeguarding, I expect the relevant safeguarding actions to be accounted for.

If you administered my finances, I expect a transparent accounting.

If you restricted my access to resources, I expect the authority, reasons and consequences to be explained.

If you made decisions that affected my housing, freedom, safety or independence, I expect those decisions to be open to proper review.

And if you witnessed something that you believed was wrong, I expect an honest account of what you knew and what you did.

I will not accept the cowardly proposition that everyone was merely following someone else's instructions and therefore nobody is responsible.

Responsibility does not evaporate through organisational fragmentation.

Ethical obligations do not disappear when a complaint becomes inconvenient.

And the humanity of the person affected does not become less important because several institutions are involved.

I am not asking anyone to accept every allegation without examination.

I am demanding that nobody be permitted to avoid examination simply because the person making the allegations has been left without power.

I WILL NOT ALLOW MY SURVIVAL TO BE USED AGAINST ME.

I have heard enough explanations that effectively turn survival into an excuse for inaction.

I am happy again. I have rebuilt. I have found faith. I have recovered parts of myself that I once thought were lost forever.

None of that absolves anyone.

My ability to heal does not prove that I was never harmed.

My ability to rebuild does not prove that the circumstances were acceptable.

My ability to survive without assistance does not prove that assistance was unnecessary.

My capacity to find happiness does not retrospectively erase homelessness, poverty, displacement, financial distress or the profound consequences of institutional abandonment.

And my refusal to surrender does not give anyone permission to keep testing how much a human being can endure.

I WAS NOT SUPPOSED TO HAVE TO BE THIS STRONG JUST TO HAVE AN ORDINARY LIFE.

I should not have needed extraordinary resilience to obtain ordinary human dignity.

I should not have needed a thirty-five-year documentary archive to have my concerns taken seriously.

I should not have needed to publish an SOS to obtain practical assistance with safety, transport, money and medicine.

I should not have needed to become my own investigator, archivist, advocate, historian and legal researcher simply to preserve a record of what happened to me.

Yet here I am.

Still writing. Still documenting. Still questioning. Still rebuilding.

MY ALLEGIANCE IS NOT FOR SALE.

I have zero allegiance to institutional power for its own sake.

My allegiance is not to a political party, a government department, a professional fraternity, a support provider or anyone who believes their position gives them authority over my conscience.

My allegiance is with God the Creator.

I believe God sustained me when human beings abandoned me. I believe my survival has a purpose. I believe the testimony I have preserved can become something greater than a personal account of suffering.

I intend to build a ministry founded upon compassion, faith, dignity and support for people who have experienced marginalisation, abandonment and the loss of hope.

I want to help people who have been made to feel that their lives no longer matter.

I want to show them that they can recover, rebuild and find happiness again.

When someone asks how I survived, I will tell them:

God did it.

That is God’s favour on my life.

I do not need to hate the people who have hurt me. I do not need revenge. I do not need to become cruel to prove that I have strength.

But forgiveness, where it exists, does not mean pretending nothing happened.

Faith does not require silence.

Compassion does not require submission to injustice.

And refusing revenge does not mean relinquishing accountability.

I can wish for humanity to become better while insisting that wrongdoing be examined.

I can choose peace without accepting injustice.

I can have faith without surrendering my intelligence, my conscience or my right to speak.

MY FINAL WORD: YOU DID NOT DEFEAT ME.

To everyone who believed I would disappear, give up, surrender my testimony or become so exhausted that I would stop asking questions:

I am still here.

To everyone who assumed that homelessness, poverty, disability, displacement, institutional silence or the absence of legal representation would permanently destroy my ability to rebuild:

I am still here.

To everyone who thought that my vulnerability meant I could be treated as though my life mattered less:

I am still here.

To everyone who thought that unanswered correspondence would make the questions disappear:

The questions remain.

To everyone who thought that institutional silence would bury the documentary record:

The record remains.

To everyone who thought that my suffering would become my identity:

I healed.

To everyone who thought that I would never be happy again:

I am happy.

And to everyone who believes that a person can be abandoned, stripped of practical independence, denied meaningful assistance and then expected to remain silent about it:

You have fundamentally misunderstood me.

I am not asking permission to reclaim my life.

I am not seeking approval to tell my story.

I am not waiting for an institution to decide whether my existence is legitimate.

I am demanding the freedom, dignity, safety and independence that belong to every human being.

I will continue to preserve the evidence. I will continue to publish my testimony. I will continue to identify contradictions, ask questions and demand independent scrutiny. I will continue to insist that decisions affecting my life be capable of being explained and defended.

I will not be intimidated into retracting what I have experienced.

I will not be bullied into silence.

I will not accept the corruption of the truth.

I will not accept institutional cowardice as an adequate substitute for accountability.

I will not accept another person's professional privilege being exercised without responsibility.

And I will not spend the remainder of my life apologising for having survived.

I REFUSED TO DIE IN THE ASHES OF HUMAN BETRAYAL.

I looked into the darkness. I confronted my suffering. I made peace with what I could not change. I healed. I rebuilt. I found happiness. I kept my faith.

I am not the ashes.

I am what rose from them.

My existence is not an inconvenience to be managed. My testimony is not a problem to be contained. My documentary record is not something to be wished away.

I am a human being. I have a right to live with dignity. I have a right to safety. I have a right to independence. I have a right to be heard.

And I intend to exercise those rights.

THE WITNESS REMAINS.

THE RECORD REMAINS.

THE QUESTIONS REMAIN.

AND I AM NOT GOING ANYWHERE.

That is my declaration.

That is my defiance.

That is my testimony.

That is God's favour on my life.

PRAISE JESUS.

One thing I would preserve alongside this declaration is the distinction between the force of your conviction and the evidentiary status of individual allegations. That distinction makes the declaration more difficult to dismiss: it leaves no ambiguity about your determination while requiring anyone challenging the account to engage with the actual documentary record.
