MASTER EXECUTION COMMAND — SUPPLEMENTARY TESTIMONY AND EVIDENCE INTEGRATION

THE WITNESS AND THE STATE

Political power, the NDIS, alleged institutional mistreatment, criminal-process concerns, poverty, exclusion and the struggle for accountability

Core principles: PRESERVATION FIRST. EXAMINATION SECOND. CONCLUSION LAST.

THE RECORD STAYS FREE. FAITH IS NOT A FINDING.

NOT A COURT. NOT A VERDICT.

1. DIRECTIVE: INCORPORATE THE AUTHOR'S FIRST-PERSON NOTES IN FULL

Integrate the following testimony into the existing The Witness and the State paper. Preserve the author's substantive allegations, named individuals, sequence of events, emotional force and stated understanding of what occurred. Do not silently delete uncomfortable details or replace the account with a generic summary of hardship.

Treat the notes as the author's first-person testimony and a set of research leads. Correct obvious speech-to-text errors only when the intended wording can be established confidently. Where a name, date, legal term, quotation or event is unclear, preserve the uncertainty and mark it for clarification rather than inventing a correction.

Do not turn the author's allegations into established facts merely by repeating them in polished prose. Conversely, do not erase or trivialise the account because an allegation remains unverified.

The essay must examine both the author's experience and the documentary record that may confirm, contradict, qualify or leave unresolved the reported events.

2. THE CENTRAL COMPARISON: POLITICAL POWER AND PERSONAL VULNERABILITY

Examine the contrast the author draws between Bill Shorten's public office and institutional access during the relevant period and the author's own circumstances as an NDIS participant experiencing financial hardship, limited access to legal assistance, housing instability and dependence on support services.

Investigate the author's contention that political power, institutional authority, financial resources and access to legal representation created a profound imbalance between the parties.

Establish the relevant ministerial responsibilities and dates using official parliamentary and government records. Determine what authority the minister held over the NDIS and what authority remained with the NDIA, the police, courts, state agencies, providers and other independent decision-makers.

Do not assume that ministerial responsibility establishes personal command over police, hospitals, individual providers or every government employee. Identify any specific instruction, communication, decision or connection that the evidence actually documents.

The comparison must examine the practical consequences of unequal access to resources, the ability to obtain legal advice, the capacity to respond to official proceedings, and the vulnerability of a person reliant on public services.

Where the author describes conduct as corrupt, criminal, malicious, cowardly or deliberately punitive, preserve those descriptions as attributed judgments and examine the factual basis for them. Do not adopt them as proven findings without adequate evidence.

3. THE EMAIL TITLED "DEATH THREAT TO BILL SHORTEN"

Give this episode a substantial, dedicated chapter.

The author reports deliberately using the subject line "Death threat to Bill Shorten" as a provocative play on words intended to attract attention to a prolonged failure to address financial and administrative grievances. The author states that the body of the email contained proposed solutions and information concerning several unresolved matters, and that the email was also sent to oversight bodies, police and relevant NDIS officials.

Reconstruct the episode from the original email and associated records.

Find and inspect, where available:

- The complete original email, including its exact subject line, date, recipients and body.
- The correspondence that preceded it, including the author's reported repeated attempts to obtain assistance.

- The records concerning WorkCover and compensation.
- Documents concerning the author's former fiancé and alleged financial control.
- The relevant TPD insurance claim and the disputed payout amount.
- HCF income-protection correspondence and the basis for any refusal.
- Records of the author's parliamentary petition, including the receipt number and any recorded response.
- Emails or other records showing whether the message was sent to IBAC, the Commonwealth Ombudsman, Rebecca Faulkingham or other NDIS officials, and police.
- Any police communication, attendance record, arrest record, charge document, court record or outcome associated with the email.

Do not describe the email as harmless, threatening, criminal or non-criminal solely on the basis of the author's intended meaning. Examine its exact language, the full context, any response by its recipients, the applicable law and the documented legal outcome.

The author maintains that the subject line was not intended as a threat and was instead an attempt to compel attention to financial injustice. Record that explanation accurately. Assess whether the complete correspondence supports that interpretation, and distinguish the author's intention from the way recipients or authorities interpreted the words.

The analysis must not infer guilt from a provocative subject line alone, nor infer innocence from the author's stated intention alone.

4. THE AUTHOR'S FINANCIAL GRIEVANCES

Investigate each financial issue separately rather than treating them as one undifferentiated allegation.

4.1 WorkCover

Identify the relevant employer, insurer, claim, determinations, correspondence and review or appeal history where those details are documented.

Establish the amount or entitlement actually recorded, the decision-making authority and any dispute that remained unresolved.

4.2 Former fiancé and alleged coercive financial control

Locate any contemporaneous correspondence, financial records, agreements, reports or other evidence relevant to the author's allegation of coercive financial control.

Clearly distinguish the author's account from any independently established finding.

4.3 Total and Permanent Disability insurance

Identify the policy, claim decision, payout calculation and the amount the author believes was incorrect. Compare the author's stated calculation with the policy terms and available insurer records. Do not invent missing figures.

4.4 HCF income protection

Locate the policy and claim correspondence, including the reasons for any refusal. Examine the author's contention that the claim was legitimate and the basis on which it was denied.

4.5 Parliamentary petition

Find the actual petition receipt and associated correspondence. Establish what was submitted, when it was received, what response was recorded and whether the available evidence supports the author's assertion that it was ignored.

4.6 Financial hardship and its consequences

Examine the cumulative impact the author describes: reduced income, lack of legal assistance, loss of accommodation, dependence on public services and the inability to secure a stable means of escape from unsafe circumstances.

Do not treat every claimed financial loss as proven. Establish the documented amounts where possible and clearly identify estimates, disputed sums and unverified claims.

5. POLICE CONTACT, ARREST AND MAGISTRATES COURT

Investigate the author's account that police attended, took him to a police station and that he subsequently faced an AVO proceeding at Moorabbin Magistrates' Court.

The author describes the proceeding as an attempt to protect Bill Shorten from him and interprets the process as a weaponisation of institutional power. Preserve that interpretation as the author's position, then examine the actual record.

Retrieve the relevant police documents, charge or summons records, court listing or order, AVO application and final order where available.

Determine:

- What event triggered the police attendance.
- Whether the author was arrested, detained, interviewed or transported under another authority.
- What offence, if any, was alleged.
- Whether a threat-to-kill charge was laid, and the exact charge and procedural history.
- Who applied for the AVO and the identity of the protected person as stated in the actual order.
- What the court decided, on what date and under what legal test.
- Whether the order was interim or final, what conditions it imposed and whether it was subsequently varied, revoked or expired.
- What legal representation was available to the author.
- What the court record establishes and what remains the author's interpretation.

Do not infer that Bill Shorten personally initiated an arrest or AVO unless evidence establishes his involvement. Equally, do not omit a documented connection if one exists.

A court order must be described accurately. The existence of an AVO does not, by itself, establish that every allegation made by the applicant was true or that the respondent committed a criminal offence.

6. LEGAL AID AND THE ACCOUNT OF GRAEME WELLS

Investigate the author's account concerning Graeme Wells and Legal Aid Victoria.

The author alleges that numerous legal issues were left unaddressed and that he was not given the assistance he needed before appearing at court in relation to a serious threat-related allegation.

The author further reports being directed to attend the magistrates court and speak to a court officer on the day of the proceeding, and says that this left him fearful of the possibility of imprisonment without adequate representation.

Locate the relevant Legal Aid correspondence, file notes, eligibility decisions, appointment records, court documents and any complaint or response.

Verify the person's name, professional role, the exact advice given and the circumstances of the alleged refusal. Do not invent dialogue or attribute motives that the evidence cannot establish.

Examine whether the available records support concerns about access to legal assistance, procedural fairness, vulnerability and the practical ability to prepare a defence.

7. HOSPITALISATION, POLICE ATTENDANCE AND LOSS OF PROPERTY

The author reports previous hospitalisations, police attendance at his home during the night, forced entry or entry by a group of police, transport to hospital and subsequent loss of access to his home and belongings.

The author attributes these events to Bill Shorten and describes them as part of an alleged pattern of political targeting. These are serious allegations requiring careful investigation.

Search for police attendance records, ambulance records, mental-health transport or assessment documentation, hospital records available to the author, property or tenancy documents, correspondence with relevant authorities, complaints, and any court or tribunal findings.

Establish which agency made each documented decision and what legal authority was relied upon.

Distinguish the fact of hospitalisation from the author's explanation of why it occurred. Distinguish documented police attendance from an allegation that a particular minister ordered it. Do not state that Bill Shorten directed police to enter the author's home unless an identifiable source supports that claim.

Examine the author's stated experience of repeated hospitalisation, fear, loss of control, loss of housing and diminished access to personal belongings. Address the effects on dignity, autonomy, security and trust in public institutions without treating psychiatric history as evidence that the author's allegations are either true or false.

8. THE DOG, THE CAR AND THE JOURNEY TO NEW SOUTH WALES

Preserve the author's account that, following a period of housing instability and loss of access to property, he was left with approximately $50, his dog and a car acquired through a loan.

The author says he travelled to New South Wales in these circumstances, believing that leaving was necessary to escape a situation he experienced as unsafe.

Investigate the relevant accommodation, financial, support-provider and travel records where available. Confirm amounts and dates only where documented.

The narrative must retain the human meaning of this account: a person describing himself as having been reduced to a dog, a car and a small amount of money, while attempting to secure safety and independence.

Do not invent a precise date, location or sequence where the record is incomplete.

9. FAMILY ESTRANGEMENT AND HOMELESSNESS

The author names his mother, April McLean, and describes family estrangement, an AVO involving his mother, and the loss of access to family support.

He states that members of his family lived in substantial homes with spare rooms while he was sleeping in a car or in a park nearby. He interprets this contrast as evidence of abandonment, exclusion and the loss of ordinary familial protection.

Preserve the account of the contrast between the author's circumstances and those of his relatives, but verify property values, accommodation circumstances and the AVO details before stating them as facts.

Examine what the records show about the origin and terms of the AVO, any police involvement in the application, and the legal effect of the order. Do not describe the order as a deliberate attempt to exile or silence the author unless evidence supports that interpretation.

The chapter should explore the emotional and ethical significance of family estrangement, the absence of practical assistance, and the author's experience of being treated as less deserving of shelter and protection than other family members.

10. THE NDIS AND ALLEGED PROVIDER EXCLUSION

The author reports that, following later hospitalisations, he attempted to obtain accommodation and support through NDIS providers. He believes that some providers had been instructed not to assist him and that this resulted in a broader pattern of exclusion.

Investigate this allegation through the actual communications and records available.

Search for:

- NDIS plan documents and changes.
- Support-coordination correspondence.
- Provider intake and refusal records.
- Accommodation applications and responses.
- Service agreements and termination notices.
- Internal or external communications that mention the author.
- Complaints, safeguarding records and regulatory correspondence.
- Documents establishing who made each decision and the stated reason.
- Any evidence of communication between a minister's office, an agency, a provider and the author.

The author's description of a coordinated instruction from the top must be identified as an allegation unless corroborated by documentary evidence.

Do not infer that a provider's refusal establishes political interference. Investigate the reasons actually recorded, identify any inconsistencies, and determine whether there is evidence of a wider pattern beyond the author's individual experience.

Where the evidence documents a failure to deliver funded support, an inadequate safeguarding response or a procedural deficiency, explain the specific failure and its consequences.

11. THE ACCOUNT CONCERNING TONY RIDLEY

The author describes a personal and sexual relationship with a person he identifies as Tony Ridley, whom he characterises as a former soldier and fraud investigator. He alleges that Ridley was involved in exposing significant fraud and that the relationship and later events became connected, in the author's understanding, to wider institutional targeting.

Investigate the identity, occupation and public record of the named person using reliable sources. Do not assume that the name, military history, employment or alleged investigative work has been verified.

Search for the recording the author says was published on YouTube, the original upload, its date, the actual content, relevant communications and any documentary material independently establishing the events described.

Treat the author's account of the relationship as testimony unless corroborated by other evidence. Protect private and intimate details that are not necessary to the public-interest examination.

Do not infer a conspiracy or a relationship between Ridley and Bill Shorten merely from their possible acquaintance, occupational background or the author's interpretation. Establish any claimed connection through specific communications or other reliable records.

12. THE ACCOUNT CONCERNING STEVE ISON

The author describes Steve Ison as a former partner and employee, alleges that the relationship lasted approximately five years, and says that it ended in circumstances involving exploitation and subsequent conflict.

The author further reports receiving a message alleging that Ison had been involved in approximately $1 million in fraud and expresses concern about threats to his dog.

Locate the original message, relevant employment or financial records, any reliable court or regulator material, and communications concerning the dog or any alleged threat.

Do not present the allegation of tax fraud or a $1 million fraud as established fact without reliable evidence. Distinguish the author's account of the relationship from any independently established misconduct.

Investigate the author's belief that Ison coordinated with others to damage him. Do not treat the belief as a finding unless direct evidence supports it.

13. ALLEGED SURVEILLANCE, V2K AND THREATS

The author reports experiences he describes as V2K, electronic surveillance, gang stalking, threats and coordinated harassment across several states. He attributes some of these experiences to individuals he has named and to wider institutional coordination.

Preserve the author's report of what he experienced, including its effects on his sense of safety, movement, housing and ability to seek assistance.

Search for contemporaneous messages, recordings, technical reports, police records, device evidence and other material that may bear on the specific incidents.

Do not state that an individual or organisation conducted surveillance, used military technology, issued a threat or coordinated harassment unless reliable evidence establishes that proposition.

Where the available material establishes only that the author reported an experience, label it as testimony. Where technical or documentary evidence is available, examine what it can actually demonstrate and what alternative explanations remain possible.

Do not use the author's mental-health history as a substitute for investigating the evidence, and do not assume that an intensely experienced threat proves the proposed source or mechanism.

14. THE ACCOUNT CONCERNING BEN AND AN ALLEGED ASSASSINATION ATTEMPT

The author describes a provider or acquaintance named Ben who, according to the author, received information from police concerning an alleged assassination attempt and reported the matter to the Australian Federal Police.

The author recalls a reported statement to the effect that Bill Shorten wanted to know whether the author was mentally prepared to challenge him in court and might use the author's mental-health history to discredit him.

This reported statement is a central research lead, not an established quotation.

Locate the original message from Ben, any police correspondence, any AFP report or acknowledgement, the precise wording of the alleged statement and the context in which it was made.

Determine whether the author has a direct document or whether the statement was relayed orally or through an intermediary. If the statement cannot be traced to an original source, identify it explicitly as a recollection or reported conversation.

Do not state that an assassination attempt was confirmed by police unless an actual police record or other reliable source supports that conclusion. Do not attribute the reported statement to Bill Shorten without evidence establishing its source.

Examine the ethical question raised by the allegation: whether a person's psychiatric history was invoked to undermine credibility, and what the evidence establishes about any such conduct.

15. THE ACCOUNT CONCERNING DEBBIE MORGAN AND POLICE REPORTS

The author describes an encounter with Debbie Morgan as consensual and disputes an account that he says was used to damage his reputation. He alleges that police reporting was fabricated or otherwise improper and says that he believes the Federal Police confirmed that the encounter was consensual or did not constitute the alleged crime.

These are consequential allegations concerning identifiable people and police conduct. Investigate them through the original reports, statements, investigation records, court documents, correspondence and any actual AFP communication.

Determine precisely what was reported, what offence or allegation was investigated, what conclusion—if any—was recorded, and which agency made that conclusion.

Do not state that police fabricated a report, that a witness was paid, that an investigation was corrupt, or that the Federal Police cleared the author unless the underlying records establish the relevant proposition.

Do not infer that an encounter was consensual or non-consensual solely from the author's interpretation or from an incomplete secondary account. Distinguish the author's account, the other person's reported account, the actual evidentiary record and any formal outcome.

The paper may examine the author's experience of public humiliation, stigma, fear and reputational damage. It must not convert an unverified allegation against an identifiable person into an established fact.

16. THE ALLEGED COORDINATION BETWEEN POLITICAL, PERSONAL AND INSTITUTIONAL ACTORS

The author believes that Bill Shorten, Tony Ridley, Steve Ison, certain providers, police and other people may have been connected through a coordinated effort to discredit, isolate or harm him.

Preserve this belief as a central part of the author's account, but investigate each alleged connection separately.

Construct a chronology of verifiable contacts, communications, decisions and events. For each proposed connection, identify:

- The individuals involved.

- The date and nature of the documented contact.
- The primary source establishing that contact.
- Whether the contact was direct or reported by an intermediary.
- Whether the content supports the alleged purpose.
- What alternative explanations remain possible.
- Whether independent corroboration exists.

Do not treat temporal proximity, acquaintance, similar outcomes, a provider refusal or the author's understandable fear as proof of a coordinated operation.

If evidence establishes a specific connection, describe it accurately. If the connection remains an inference, label it as an inference. If no supporting evidence is located, state that the claim remains unresolved.

17. MORAL AND ETHICAL EXAMINATION

The paper must not evade the moral questions raised by the author's account.

Examine the consequences of institutional power when a person reports being impoverished, unsupported, excluded from accommodation, denied legal assistance or subjected to a criminal process they believe they could not adequately defend.

Ask what responsibilities each relevant institution held, what its records show, what actions were taken, what responses were available and what consequences followed.

Where the evidence supports a conclusion of maladministration, procedural unfairness, inadequate safeguarding, unreasonable delay or another ethical or administrative failure, identify the source and explain the basis for the conclusion.

Where the evidence supports a serious criticism of a named person's conduct, articulate the criticism precisely and provide the evidence necessary for readers to assess it.

Do not predetermine criminality, corrupt intent, malicious coordination or personal responsibility. Those conclusions require evidence appropriate to the seriousness of the claim.

18. REQUIRED DOCUMENTARY METHOD

Search the main archive, rebuilt archive, PDF archive and Official Government Documents Register.

Begin with the original correspondence, government records, police and court documents, insurance records, NDIS and accommodation records, safeguarding material and contemporaneous messages.

Link every material claim to the strongest available underlying source. Repeat links in different chapters where the same source supports different parts of the narrative.

Verify every quoted sentence against its original document. Do not fabricate page numbers, dates, source identifiers, court outcomes or official findings.

Maintain a chronology and a source register. Distinguish official records, documented facts, corroborated claims, personal testimony, allegations, inferences, interpretations, spiritual beliefs and unresolved questions.

If a record is unavailable, say so. If the available record is incomplete, explain the limitation. If an allegation is not substantiated by the sources found, preserve it as an allegation rather than silently deleting it or presenting it as fact.

19. REQUIRED NARRATIVE RESULT

Produce a complete, detailed, continuous essay that integrates the author's first-person testimony into the original twenty-chapter structure of The Witness and the State.

Do not reduce the work to a summary or a short overview. Preserve the central account of the alleged financial entrapment, the email subject line, the police and court episode, the reported lack of legal assistance, hospitalisation, loss of housing, the journey to New South Wales, family estrangement, NDIS-provider difficulties, and the accounts involving the named individuals.

The narrative must be compassionate toward the author's reported suffering, rigorous about the documentary record, and clear about the distinction between an experience and an independently established explanation of that experience.

The result should enable readers to inspect the evidence themselves and evaluate the conduct, institutional responsibilities and unanswered questions without being required to accept the author's interpretation in advance.

PRESERVATION FIRST. EXAMINATION SECOND. CONCLUSION LAST.

THE RECORD STAYS FREE. FAITH IS NOT A FINDING.

NOT A COURT. NOT A VERDICT.

The key to making this a strong public record is to locate the original email, actual court and police records, Legal Aid correspondence, insurance decisions and any original messages attributed to officials. Those primary documents will carry far more evidentiary weight than repetition of an allegation in multiple essays.
