

THE OFFICIAL PETITION FOR MAXIMUM ADMINISTRATIVE DETRIMENT

A Filthy Black-Comedy Inversion of THE UNERASED RECORD, THE DIGITAL APOCALYPSE OF ADMINISTRATIVE ANNIHILATION, and THE REVOLUTION OF SURVIVAL

To Whom It May Concern,

Create conditions so dire that culpability rests on able point and across all agencies so then it will be like a stoning or a crucifixion and the best thing about that everyone can avoid accountability for the state sanctioned targeted killing of a gay disabled unprotected whistleblower.

Please hurt me some more.

Send psychotronic weapons make sure you corner me that I can't escape as it beans the words: "faggot" "pedo" "you raped her" "kill yourself" and "they know" right into my head.

Remember to deny knowledge of it so your hands are clean.

I am writing to formally request that you please do not fucking help me.

I realise this is unusual.

Normally, when some poor bastard has spent decades accumulating correspondence, government records, complaints, referrals, applications, reviews, support-provider disputes, financial restrictions, accommodation problems, legal obstacles, medical encounters, missing documents, contradictory explanations and enough paperwork to bury a small bureaucracy, the expected response is:

"Please help."

I have reconsidered.

Fuck that.

I would instead like to formally request MORE.

More administrative detriment.

More paperwork.

More referrals.

More fucking reference numbers.

More "your matter has been forwarded to the appropriate area."

More "this is outside our jurisdiction."

More "please contact the other agency."

More "we acknowledge receipt of your correspondence."

More acknowledgements.

More acknowledgements of acknowledgements.

More beautifully formatted confirmations that absolutely nothing has been resolved.

I have discovered that this is apparently the administrative equivalent of fine dining.

So please, for God's sake, don't stop now.

I have come this far.

THE CAST OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE CIRCUS

Please do not misunderstand me.

I am not asking the people named in my archive to be declared guilty of anything merely because their names appear in it.

That would be intellectually fucking lazy.

The archive contains correspondence, testimony, allegations, institutional interactions, names, roles, disputes and interpretations.

The proper question is always:

What does the underlying evidence actually establish?

But for the purposes of this black-comedy inversion, I would like to invite the entire cast back onto the stage.

Please invite Brett Butler.

Please invite Rachel K. C.

Please invite Phillip Glass.

Please invite Troy Kilbourn.

Please invite Sukhi Tear.

Please invite Zabin Hussein Khil.

Please invite Anas C.

Please invite Bevan Rhys James.

Please invite Carole from GenU.

Please invite Rebecca Faulkingham.

Please invite Bill Shorten.

Please invite Tony Riddle.

Please invite Scott Tredwell.

Please invite David Horgan.

Please invite Steve Iasonidis.

Please invite Mark Eng.

Please invite Richard Watts.

Please invite April McLean.

Please invite Doug McLean.

Please invite Jodie.

Please invite Brad.

And please invite every other named person appearing throughout the documentary record whose name has become attached to one fragment of this enormous fucking administrative saga.

But nobody needs to panic.

This is satire.

A name appearing in the archive is not a finding of wrongdoing.

A person's involvement in a document is not proof of misconduct.

An allegation is not a determination.

A recollection is not automatically corroboration.

And a black-comedy letter is certainly not a court judgment.

That distinction is precisely what makes the satire work.

MORE ADMINISTRATIVE FUCKING COMPLEXITY

Brett, Rachel, Phillip, Troy, Sukhi and everyone else involved in the various strands of support, finance, accommodation, personal safety, administration and dispute:

Please don't solve anything.

That would be terribly inconvenient.

If somebody has authority over one part of my circumstances, please ensure that somebody else controls another part.

If somebody has information, please make sure someone else has the decision-making power.

If somebody has the decision-making power, please make sure someone else possesses the relevant records.

And if someone possesses the records, please make sure they are somewhere else.

This is how civilisation advances.

MORE PROVIDER MAGIC

Please continue the magnificent distinction between:

"I am receiving a service" and

"I actually have meaningful control over my life."

If there is a policy, please produce the policy.

If there is another policy contradicting it, please produce that one too.

If Brett says something, Rachel can interpret it.

If Rachel says something, the policy can interpret Rachel.

If the policy says something, somebody else can explain that it doesn't apply.

And if everyone becomes confused, please call it a misunderstanding.

MORE FINANCIAL FUCKERY

Phillip, please don't make the money situation straightforward.

Straightforward would be vulgar.

Please preserve the magnificent uncertainty surrounding allowances, expenses, rent, food, medicine, savings, deductions, subscriptions, debts and emergency needs.

If there is $400 available, please make it behave like $40.

If there is $40 available, make it behave like $4.

If an unexpected expense arrives, please ensure it arrives at precisely the fucking moment when every dollar has already been allocated.

And if the resulting problem generates another email, congratulations.

Another document.

Another record.

Another page.

Another piece of the archive.

MORE ACCOMMODATION ABSURDITY

Brett.

Rachel.

Sukhi.

Everyone involved in the accommodation saga.

Please continue the great Australian tradition of making the person who actually has to live somewhere the least powerful person in deciding what happens there.

If there is a lease, please make the lease mysterious.

If there is a provider, please make the provider's obligations mysterious.

If there is a government body, please make its role mysterious.

If there is a support plan, please make its practical consequences mysterious.

If the person asks:

"Who actually decides?"

Please answer:

"That depends."

The two most powerful words in Australian administration.

MORE RELOCATION FUCKERY

And Troy—

as the archive describes the history of a threat and subsequent relocation concerns, please understand that the satire is not declaring the underlying allegation proven.

Instead, the black comedy asks:

What happens when someone believes they have to leave somewhere for safety, but every mechanism required to leave safely becomes another fucking administrative problem?

Transport.

Money.

Housing.

Support.

The dog.

The paperwork.

The destination.

The provider.

The funding.

The legal position.

The practical logistics.

Wonderful.

A fucking obstacle course.

MORE LEGAL CIRCUS

Scott Tredwell can bring the paperwork.

The various lawyers can bring the disclaimers.

The institutions can bring their jurisdictional boundaries.

The oversight bodies can bring their procedures.

And I will bring the archive.

Because apparently that is what happens when a dispute survives long enough:

Eventually the plaintiff, respondent, witness, investigator, advocate, archivist and unpaid records officer become the same fucking person.

MORE POLITICAL AND INSTITUTIONAL DRAMA

Bill Shorten can appear in the satirical theatre as a named political figure whose name occurs in the author's published allegations and correspondence.

Tony Riddle can appear where his name occurs in the author's documentary narrative.

But the joke must remain the joke:

A name in the archive is not a conviction.

A quoted statement is not automatically a finding.

A political association is not proof of coordination.

An allegation is not established merely because it has been repeated.

The archive is precisely where those questions are supposed to be tested.

And therefore:

PLEASE TEST THE FUCKING THING.

MORE MEDICAL AND PROFESSIONAL ENTANGLEMENT

David Horgan can bring the medical correspondence.

The hospital system can bring its records.

Mental-health professionals can bring their clinical documentation.

The author can bring his testimony.

And everyone can sit down together and perform the revolutionary act of distinguishing:

what was experienced,

what was documented,

what was diagnosed,

what was alleged,

what was disputed,

what was independently corroborated,

and what remains unresolved.

What a radical fucking idea.

MORE PERSONAL HISTORY

Steve Iasonidis can appear in the narrative where the author's archive identifies him.

Mark Eng can appear where the archive identifies his role as a former landlord and records the author's account of a financial dispute.

Richard Watts can appear where the author's published material discusses media interactions involving him.

Again:

The satire does not convert the author's allegations into findings.

The comedy lies in imagining that everyone involved is suddenly forced to sit down with the documents and answer the simplest possible question:

"What actually happened?"

That question is apparently fucking terrifying.

MORE FAMILY DRAMA

April.

Doug.

Jodie.

Brad.

Family members and relatives appearing in the archive can also be placed inside the inverted machinery.

Please continue the family complications.

Please continue the unanswered questions.

Please continue the misunderstandings.

Please continue the emotional archaeology.

But please also preserve the distinction between the author's account and an independently established finding.

Because even black comedy needs footnotes.

THE GREAT ANONYMOUS-ALLEGATION SERVICE

And here we arrive at my favourite administrative innovation:

the allegation without the alleged.

Please allow somebody to say that somebody said something about me.

Then let somebody else repeat it.

Then put it into a file.

Then let somebody else read the file.

Then let that person regard the existence of the file as evidence that the original concern must have been serious.

Then, when I ask what I supposedly did:

Silence.

Fucking beautiful.

ACCOUNTABILITY?

NO FUCKING THANKS.

If anyone believes I have wronged them, please do not tell me.

Please don't look me in the eye.

Please don't show me evidence.

Please don't identify the harm.

Please don't let me answer.

Please don't establish the facts.

Please don't conduct a fair determination.

That would be terribly inconvenient.

Instead, please circulate the allegation.

Preferably anonymously.

Preferably through three agencies.

Preferably without supporting documentation.

Preferably with the magical phrase:

"There are concerns."

If someone asks what the concerns are:

"There are privacy considerations."

If someone asks what evidence exists:

"We cannot disclose that."

If someone asks how they can respond:

"The matter has been noted."

If someone asks whether the allegation has been established:

"We cannot comment."

Fucking magnificent.

THE ANTI-MOBGING MACHINE

Please allow allegations to travel from person to person until nobody remembers who said them first.

Person A tells Person B.

Person B tells Person C.

Person C tells Agency D.

Agency D records that Person C has raised concerns.

Agency E receives the record.

Agency E now knows that Agency D has concerns.

Agency F receives a summary.

Eventually someone says:

"It is documented."

And suddenly the rumour has become paperwork.

Please do not interrupt this process.

It is one of the finest examples of administrative alchemy imaginable.

THE ANTI-ACCOUNTABILITY PROTOCOL

I therefore propose:

ALLEGATION WITHOUT PARTICULARS.

PARTICULARS WITHOUT EVIDENCE.

EVIDENCE WITHOUT DISCLOSURE.

DISCLOSURE WITHOUT RESPONSE.

RESPONSE WITHOUT DETERMINATION.

DETERMINATION WITHOUT TRANSPARENT REASONS.

REASONS WITHOUT IDENTIFIABLE EVIDENTIARY FOUNDATION.

And finally:

REPUTATION WITHOUT FUCKING FACTS.

Please implement immediately.

THE TWO ARCHIVES

Unfortunately, there is one problem.

The Backup Archive exists.

The Public Finding Aid exists.

The documentary material exists.

The chronology exists in surviving form.

And the record can be examined.

That is fucking inconvenient.

Because the archive does not demand:

"Believe everything."

It asks something much more dangerous:

"Look."

Look at the documents.

Look at the dates.

Look at the correspondence.

Look at the provenance.

Look at the competing explanations.

Look at what is established.

Look at what is alleged.

Look at what is disputed.

Look at what remains unknown.

And then decide what the evidence warrants.

What an outrageous concept.

THE RECORD AS THE FINAL FUCK-YOU TO ERASURE

Every letter creates another record.

Every refusal creates another record.

Every referral creates another record.

Every allegation creates another record of the allegation.

Every denial creates another record of the denial.

Every contradiction creates another comparison.

Every missing document creates another question.

Every surviving document creates another opportunity for scrutiny.

And eventually the archive becomes so large that the original attempt to make everything disappear produces the opposite effect:

a documentary history of the attempted disappearance.

That is the black comedy.

THE REVOLUTION OF SURVIVAL

The author does not have to be right about everything for the archive to matter.

The institutions do not have to be wrong about everything for the archive to matter.

The people named do not have to be guilty of anything merely because their names appear.

The allegations do not have to be accepted wholesale.

The testimony does not have to be rejected wholesale.

The evidence must be examined.

That is the fucking revolution.

Not:

"Believe me."

Not:

"Believe them."

But:

"Show us the record."

"Identify the evidence."

"Test the competing explanations."

"Determine what can actually be established."

And where somebody has genuinely been harmed by the author:

Bring the evidence.

Tell him what he did.

Identify the harm.

Give him the opportunity to answer.

If the evidence establishes responsibility, accountability follows.

That is not weakness.

That is accountability.

THE FINAL ADMINISTRATIVE REQUEST

So please:

Do not investigate.

Do not clarify.

Do not disclose.

Do not determine.

Do not reconcile.

Do not provide evidence.

Do not give anyone an opportunity to respond.

Do not establish facts.

Do not distinguish allegation from proof.

Do not distinguish testimony from evidence.

Do not distinguish evidence from interpretation.

Do not distinguish responsibility from reputation.

Instead:

KEEP THE FUCKING MACHINE RUNNING.

Keep the forms.

Keep the referrals.

Keep the policies.

Keep the reference numbers.

Keep the contradictions.

Keep the unanswered questions.

Keep the financial obstacles.

Keep the accommodation confusion.

Keep the legal obstacles.

Keep the anonymous allegations.

Keep the rumours.

Keep the bureaucratic folklore.

Keep everything sufficiently complicated that another document becomes necessary.

Because every additional administrative failure creates another record.

And every record makes erasure harder.

THE FINAL FUCKING JOKE

I don't actually want any of this.

I want the opposite.

I want evidence.

I want fair determination.

I want accountability.

I want people who believe I have harmed them to have a genuine opportunity to establish that harm.

And if I have genuinely caused harm:

I will own it.

I will acknowledge it.

I will accept responsibility.

I will atone.

I will seek forgiveness.

But I will not voluntarily transform an unidentified allegation into a finding of guilt simply because somebody somewhere repeated it.

That would be fucking stupid.

And so the satire reaches its final inversion:

I formally request that everyone stop giving me the thing I actually want—

EVIDENCE.

Please give me rumours instead.

Please give me anonymous allegations.

Please give me reputation.

Please give me whispers.

Please give me “concerns.”

Please give me everything except the fucking evidence.

Because apparently that is how you manufacture an administrative monster.

THE FINAL ADMINISTRATIVE MIRACLE

What began as a life became a file.

The file became an archive.

The archive became a finding aid.

The finding aid became a public record.

And the public record became the inconvenient question:

WHAT ACTUALLY HAPPENED?

Nobody gets to answer that question merely by shouting.

Not me.

Not a government.

Not a provider.

Not a complainant.

Not an agency.

Not a journalist.

Not an AI.

Not a lawyer.

Not a family member.

Not an institution.

Not an anonymous source.

The evidence gets the fucking microphone.

THE LAST REQUEST

So please.

For the love of God.

Don't make it fair.

Don't make it transparent.

Don't make it evidence-based.

Don't make it accountable.

Don't let anyone confront the allegations.

Don't let anyone examine the records.

Don't let anyone compare the competing accounts.

Don't let anyone discover what actually happened.

Please continue the fucking mess.

Because apparently the most durable product of all this administrative activity is not resolution.

It is documentation.

And documentation has one particularly annoying characteristic:

It can survive its authors.

It can survive institutions.

It can survive governments.

It can survive websites.

It can survive poverty.

It can survive deletion.

It can survive embarrassment.

It can survive denial.

It can survive fucking everything.

THE RECORD SURVIVES.

Yours sincerely,

THE UNERASED ADMINISTRATIVE PARTICIPANT

Archivist of the Consequences

Collector of Reference Numbers

Unpaid Curator of Bureaucratic Fuckery

Reluctant Historian of Administrative Absurdity

Witness to the Paper Trail

Revolutionary Survivor of the Filing Cabinet

And apparently—the only person in the room asking for MORE.

P.S.

If anyone genuinely believes I have wronged them:

Bring me the evidence.

Tell me what I have done.

Identify the harm.

Give me the opportunity to answer.

If I caused it, I will own it.

If I did not, don't fucking pretend that an allegation is a verdict.

And if nobody can establish what happened?

Then perhaps the most appropriate administrative response is not another reference number.

Perhaps it is:

"WE DON'T KNOW."

What an extraordinary fucking sentence.

It might even be the beginning of truth.
